

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LAW PARTNERSHIP.—A SOLICITOR, admitted in 1853, having a small but respectable Practice in the City, is desirous of joining a Gentleman of longer standing, as WORKING PARTNER, upon payment of a moderate premium. Address, stating amount of premium required, and full particulars, to A. B., Ladd's, Post-office, Harrow-road. Principals only will be treated with.

LAW.—WANTED, by a Married Man, aged 27, a SITUATION as COPYING and GENERAL CLERK. The advertiser is a rapid and good writer, can abstract deeds, draw small plans, &c., and would make himself generally useful. Good reference. Address, J. D., Mr. Hutchinson's, 37, Wilton-square, New North-road, Islington.

The Residue of the valuable Library of the late Thomas Jolley, Esq., F. S. A.; also the celebrated Garrick's Shaksperian Cup.

Messrs. S. LEIGH SOTHEY and JOHN WILKINSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property and Works illustrative of the Fine Arts, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 3, Wellington-street, Strand, on TUESDAY, the 16th January, 1855, at 1 precisely.

THE RESIDUE of the valuable LIBRARY of the late THOMAS JOLLEY, Esq., F. S. A., (forming the Fifty-third Day's Sale of the entire Collection); comprising some curious and rare Books, early Voyages and Travels, Facetiae, Poetry, Drama, Impostures, and other curious subjects. Also GARRICK'S CELEBRATED CUP, formed from the Mulberry Tree planted by the hand of Shakspeare, with an inscription on the stem from the Ode of Garrick, by whom it was used at the representation of the Shaksperian Jubilee at Drury-lane. To which is added another Collection of Books, in Spanish, Italian, French, and English Literature; which contains a copy of the scarce Romancero General, of Madrid, 1694, with the extremely rare Second Part, printed at Valladolid, 1605.

May be viewed two days previous, and Catalogues had; if in the country, on receipt of six postage stamps.

A valuable Collection of Books, the Property of a Gentleman. Messrs. S. LEIGH SOTHEY and JOHN WILKINSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property and Works illustrative of the Fine Arts, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 3, Wellington-street, Strand, on WEDNESDAY, the 17th January, 1855, and three following days, at 1 o'clock precisely.

A VALUABLE COLLECTION of BOOKS, the property of a Gentleman; comprising Voyages and Travels in all languages, many relating to America; a large Collection of American printed Tracts and Sermons, many of which are scarce; Works on the American Indians, by early American Divines; Divinity, History, Topography, and Poetry; Works on Angling; Mystical Books, and Works on Astrology; Collections of Tracts, Illustrated Books, Privately-printed Books, Mathematical Books, &c.; including the Works of Baxter, Lightfoot, Manton, Goodwin, Charnock, Bramhall, Laud, Hooker, Cotton, Edwards, Usher, Behmen, and other eminent Authors.

May be viewed two days previous to the sale, and Catalogues had; if in the country, on receipt of six postage stamps.

The valuable Theological, Classical, Astronomical, and General Library of the Rev. Dr. Hussey.

Messrs. S. LEIGH SOTHEY and JOHN WILKINSON, Auctioneers of Literary Property and Works illustrative of the Fine Arts, will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, 3, Wellington-street, Strand, on MONDAY, the 22nd January, 1855, and four following days, at 1 o'clock precisely.

Dr. HUSSEY, comprising Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, editio Brianus Waltonus, cum Castelli Lexico, 8 vols.; Biblia Hebraica, cum notis criticis, auctore Houbigant, 4 vols.; Biblia Hebraica, editio Kennicott, 2 vols.; Biblia Graeca, editio H. Holmes et Parsons, 5 vols. in 3; Biblia Maxima, cum Annotationibus N. d. Lyra, and other learned critics, 19 vols. in 10, a fine copy; Bibliotheca Maxima veterum Patrum, ex editione M. de la Bigne, 27 vols. in 18, a fine set; Bullarium Magnum Romanum a Leone Magno ad Benedictum XIV., 19 vols. in 11; M. de Calasio, Concordantiae Sacrorum Bibliorum Hebraeorum, ed. Romane, 4 vols.; Conciliorum Acta, studio Harduini, fine copy, in 12 vols.; Critici Sacri et Theologi, a fine copy, in 13 vols.; Rosenmüller's Scholia in Vetus et Novum Testamentum, 18 vols.; Ortus Vocabulorum, the rare first edition, by Wynkyn de Worde; Promptorium Parvulorum, by Pynson, a work of great rarity.

Among the Astronomical Works may be enumerated the Cambridge Astronomical Observations, 16 vols. in 17; the valuable Greenwich Observations, made under the direction of Professor Airy, 30 vols.; Astronomical Observations by Mr. Johnson, at the Radcliffe Observatory, from 1840 to 1851, 12 vols.; Works of La Place, Schumacher, Vince, Montclair, Delambre, and other distinguished Astronomers.

Among the Miscellaneous Books will be found a very fine set of Grose's Antiquities of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, 10 vols.; the best edition of Stowe's London, by Strype; and other valuable works.

May be viewed two days previous to the sale, and Catalogues had; if in the country, on receipt of six postage stamps.

VOL. I.—NEW SERIES.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.—THIRD EDITION. Just published, 4 vols. 8vo., 4l. 4s. cloth, (dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty the Queen).

NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND, in which are interwoven, under a new and original arrangement of the general subject, all such parts of the WORK of BLACKSTONE as are applicable to the present times. Together with full but compendious Expositions of the Modern Improvements of the Law up to the latest period, the original and adopted materials being throughout the work typographically distinguished from each other. By HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant at Law. Third Edition. Prepared for the press by JAMES STEPHEN, of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, and Professor of English Law, &c. at King's College, London.

From the Law Magazine.—"We have long regarded this as the most valuable law-book extant. We make no exception. We believe, moreover, the labour saved to the student by this work to be invaluable. Nor are we sure that any amount of labour could give him the same comprehensive insight to the science he is about to enter upon. It is the grammar of the law. It is sheer nonsense to talk of the worth of Blackstone now-a-days. We undertake to say that the student who should read him now would have to unread half the work contains, and add as much more to his information when he had exhausted all that Blackstone knew. This results not merely from the changes which have since taken place, but from the diffuse and often verbose style in which Blackstone wrote his very faulty work, which it has been the fashion of a comparatively illiterate age to laud and extol. We venture to suggest to Serjeant Stephen to discard Blackstone altogether, and to rewrite the passages he has modestly but injudiciously interpolated in his own infinitely superior composition. We may here allude to the great care taken by Mr. James Stephen, to whom much credit is due for the intelligent zeal and diligence he has evinced in preparing this edition of Stephen's Commentaries for the press."

From the Legal Observer.—"We welcome a new and third edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England, founded on the text of Blackstone. In this edition the learned author has been ably assisted by his son, Mr. James Stephen. They have, with great diligence and accuracy, digested the chief alterations in the law since the last edition of the work—a task of great difficulty, requiring no ordinary knowledge of the law as it was and as it is, with an extraordinary power of condensing and arranging the changes which have been effected in nearly all departments of our judicial system from year to year. The arduous task of this new edition has been ably performed. We know not any work which, taken as a whole, can be compared with the Commentaries as the first introduction to the study of the laws of England, whether for the use of the lawyer, the legislator, or the private gentleman."

From the Justice of the Peace.—"To speak in terms of approbation of a work on which the fiat of public opinion has so unmistakably set its stamp would be altogether an act of supererogation. Every one knows that the last four or five years have been a stirring time in the way of legal reform. He will therefore be quite prepared to learn that the present edition of the New Commentaries bears the mark of alteration, either in text or note, in almost every chapter throughout the work, if not in every page. We honestly and heartily advise him to turn to the work itself, and he will find that it not only contains the latest information upon almost every subject he may require to be informed upon, but that as in former editions, so in this, whatever is handled is treated in that perspicuous and scientific manner which has hitherto contributed to extend the reputation of the New Commentaries."

From the Law Times.—"Assuming that all prudent practitioners and students will wash their hands of the past, and begin to form small practical libraries entirely of the recent law, they could not find a better foundation than this third and new edition of Serjeant Stephen's Commentaries, which has been moulded throughout to the present state of the law, and comprises all the recent alterations. Every lawyer knows the worth of this famous work as it came from the hands of its author; we can assure them that it has lost none of its value in the hands of his son, who has performed his laborious task of editing all, and rewriting much, with the same care, the same industry, the same mastery of the principles of our law, and in the same clear and graceful style, that recommended the compositions of his father to popularity, even more than the fulness of learning, without its parade, that distinguishes these Commentaries. We heartily recommend these Commentaries as beyond measure the best book that has ever appeared to form a foundation for the study of the law of England."

HIS "OLD FRIENDS" AND "NEW FRIENDS."
Third Series, Monthly, price 2d.

THE FAMILY FRIEND

Commenced as a Monthly Periodical, the first Number being published in January, 1849. It quickly triumphed over the obstacles that usually beset literary undertakings, and in a few months acquired a very large circulation. This success, coupled with the urgent solicitations of many sincere but over-zealous friends, induced a more frequent issue of the work, which was accordingly brought out bi-monthly, in January, 1850, and continued to be published on the 1st and 15th of every month, until July 8, 1852, when the

FIRST SERIES, in Six Volumes, was completed; and a SECOND SERIES, now in Ten Volumes, began to be issued in weekly numbers, afterwards bound up into monthly parts and quarterly volumes. From all classes of society in every part of the kingdom, from the highest personages in the realm, and from every section of the public press, kind wishes and friendly co-operation have most warmly greeted our work, cheered on its production, and rendered the performance of our duties a labour of love in the widest sense. But it is very generally felt that a weekly issue scarcely allows time for the reader to enjoy the large quantity of matter, practically useful, instructive, and amusing, that fills each number; and that the growth of our volumes is too rapid. Therefore it is determined in future to publish the FAMILY FRIEND monthly, and with the NEW YEAR commence a NEW SERIES, adopting not merely the original plan of publication upon which the work was started, but also adhering as closely as possible to the spirit of our first conception. We confidently believe that "Old Friends" will be pleased with this announcement, while we are sure that "New Friends" shall have cause to be satisfied. Every subject that can interest our family of friends—new inventions, and discoveries intended to economise the household and facilitate domestic management, receipts, gossip on current events, designs for the work-table, industrial progress, and practical science—will be varied with articles on general literature, tales, essays, sketches, trifles, and treasures. Our aim will be to have something for every one, "kindly in its tone, useful in its object, and moral in its tendency." Each volume is perfect in itself, and forms an elegant and readable book, embellished with beautiful illustrations, diagrams, &c., engraved for the work by first-rate artists.

The following is a type of the opinion formed of THE FAMILY FRIEND, and expressed by upwards of Three Hundred Newspapers.

EXTRACT.

"We know of no Miscellany more deserving of wide-spread circulation than THE FAMILY FRIEND. It is emphatically the Magazine for a Family. Its pages present something for all; there is no member of the domestic circle forgotten, and no class of society overlooked. It is itself a Gentleman's Magazine, a Lady's Magazine, a Mother's Magazine, a Youth's Magazine, and a Child's Companion. It is, as its title correctly declares, a Magazine of Domestic Economy, Entertainment, Instruction, and Practical Science.' We have received it into our home circle with great pleasure, for it is not only a family visitor, but really a Family Friend. We cannot describe its contents; they are an omnium gatherum—a repository of things pleasant and profitable, of things gay and grave; selected with remarkable good taste, and edited with much tact and judgment. It is a work capitally adapted to cheer the happy fireside of home; and to aid the development of social affection."—Bradford Observer.

PRICE TWOPENCE MONTHLY.

London: Ward & Lock, 158, Fleet-street, and sold by all Booksellers and Newspapers.

THE YEAR 1855 bids fair to be one of the most important and eventful of modern history. On the 6th of January, 1855, will be issued the First Number of a New Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS; and not merely a New Volume, but of a New Year—each volume being perfect and complete in itself—containing, for the time, a faithful record, pictorial and descriptive, of all events of interest in every part of the world. To that limited portion of the public who do not subscribe to this Journal it may be stated, that no period could be selected more opportune for commencing, the whole expense being but Twenty-six Shillings per annum, exclusive of double numbers, which are issued on rare occasions, when it would be impossible to crowd the important events and engravings into a single number; for this small sum the Subscriber will receive Twenty-four large Pages—Seventy-two Columns—of the most interesting information, carefully selected from the news of the week, interspersed with a variety of charming articles on the chief topics of the day.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS has, by its impartial and consistent advocacy of the welfare of the public, secured for itself a political influence scarcely second to any newspaper in the empire; and reference can, with some pride, be made to the support afforded to all beneficial measures proposed and adopted by the English Parliament.

Foreign Politics will ever command the attention which ought to be devoted to so important a feature of a Newspaper. On the question of the Russian War, during the year 1854, ONE THOUSAND ENGRAVINGS appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Extensive arrangements, calculated to improve this popular Journal, and engagements such as will greatly enrich its Literary, Scientific, and other Departments, have been made, and will thus combine on this Paper the greatest talent of the day.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS has been established thirteen years, during which period it has received a greater degree of encouragement and approbation than any Journal ever published. This is proved by the Returns of Stamps issued from time to time by order of Parliament. The Stamps applied for the first six months of 1854 was upwards of 2,734,000—showing a WEEKLY CIRCULATION OF UPWARDS OF ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY THOUSAND COPIES!

Terms (for payment in advance)—Half-year, 13s. 6d.; Year, 26s. Any of the Volumes of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, from the commencement to the present time, may now be had, in paper or cloth. Covers for binding the volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

All Numbers may be sent free by Post to any part of the Kingdom and the Colonies.

Give an order for Six Months to insure all the gratuitous Prints and Supplements. Supplied by all Booksellers and Newsmen.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is published in London every Saturday, stamped, to go free by Post, 6d. per Copy.

ADDRESS TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS AND THE PROFESSION.

In presenting to the Profession the First Number of a New Series of THE JURIST, we (the Proprietors) feel desirous of explaining to the subscribers our reasons for altering the plan of a periodical which has apparently given so much satisfaction for a period of eighteen years. The great drawback in the management of the pages of THE JURIST has been want of space, which, under the old system of stamping newspapers, could not have been remedied without a heavy expense in the way of Supplements, for the liquidation of which the subscribers must have been charged. The changes in the stamp department, and the tolerably unfettered condition of newspapers, leave us now in a condition to propose, and we hope fully to carry out, the following improvements:—

1. We shall in future appear with an extra cover of at least four pages, (to be increased to eight or twelve in case of need), which will be exclusively devoted to temporary index matter and advertisements. We shall thus at once render ourselves more useful to advertisers, preserve our other departments from intrusion, and give them additional space. Instead of giving to the Reports a portion of each number varying as at present from eight to twenty-four pages, we shall in future give twenty-four pages of Reports as the minimum in every number.

2. We shall print our annual selection and abstracts of statutes promptly upon their passing, and with a separate paging, so that at the close of the session they may be separated from the other matter.

3. Greater facilities of reference to our pages (in which we are conscious much valuable matter has been hitherto locked up for want of proper indexes) will be afforded, by presenting, in addition to the weekly table of contents, a quarterly index nominum et rerum; and also, in addition to the full annual Digest, a concise annual index to the reported points, which will appear in time to be bound up with the volume to which it belongs.

4. The gentlemen who have hitherto reported for THE JURIST will continue to do so, and this will be the best guarantee for the faithfulness and accuracy of the Reports. But the Reports will be subjected to careful supervision in respect of the form and order of their appearance. The arguments of counsel will be condensed, and the space gained by that means, and by the enlargement of the paper, will enable us to report all the cases of practical importance in all the Superior Courts. They will be reported as soon as possible after decision, priority being given to those which are considered to be of immediate interest.

5. Great attention will be given to the "Second Part," or miscellaneous portion of THE JURIST, in the several departments of leading and original articles, correspondence, notices of new books, parliamentary intelligence, and legal news.

6. Subscribers for a volume, at the annual subscription of 3*l.* 3*s.*, (paid in advance), will be entitled to all supplementary extra numbers, as well as to the Analytical Digest of Cases in all the regular Reports and in THE JURIST published during the year.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 13, 1855.

IN a recent case in the Court of Bankruptcy* it appeared that the bankrupts, who were auctioneers, had speculated with deposits received by them in the way of their business, and the presiding commissioner is reported to have said, that, in strictness, auctioneers had no right to speculate with deposits intrusted to their care, but that a contrary opinion prevailed throughout the mercantile community. We believe that the learned commissioner was in error as to the prevalence of any such opinion, and that the community to whom it was attributed were as much surprised as any one else to hear that deposits had thus been dealt with.

We are confirmed in this view by a letter recently published in "The Times," bearing the signature of a respectable firm of auctioneers, stating that "it is not customary for auctioneers to speculate with deposits. . . . The only advantage derived by an auctioneer from a deposit is such interest as a banker will allow upon a deposit account; and as the money is held for a short and uncertain time only, such interest is never more than commensurate with the trouble and risk attending the deposit."

This is the proper and only use to which deposits should be applied while they remain in the hands of auctioneers, who are in the position of stakeholders or depositaries in respect of such funds. The deposit paid by the purchaser on a sale by auction is held by the auctioneer for both vendor and purchaser, and he ought not to part with it (except by the consent of both parties) until default has been made by one or the other, which may authorise the return or payment over of the money, or until the purchase has been completed, in which case it is handed over to the vendor as part of the purchase money.

The following observations and decisions relating to the law of deposits paid on sales by auction are taken from Sugden's Concise View of Vendors and Purchasers, (c. 1, s. 3), and are well worthy of perusal both by auctioneers and that large class of the public who frequent the auction mart:—

"Where the auctioneer was also the attorney of the seller, and paid over the money to the seller after he knew that objections to the title had been raised, an action against him for the deposit was sustained. In a later case, where the auctioneer had paid over the deposit to the vendor, without any notice from the purchaser not to do so, and before any defect of title was discovered, it was held that the purchaser (the title being defective) might recover the deposit from the auctioneer. If a good title is not made out, the purchaser becomes entitled to his deposit; and, in strictness, an action may be maintained for it without giving notice of the default to the auctioneer. But if a purchaser has agreed that the payment to an agent shall be considered as a payment personally to the vendor, his remedy for his deposit will be against the latter. If both the parties claim the deposit, the auctioneer may file a bill of interpleader, and pray for an injunction, which will be granted upon payment into court of the deposit. . . . An auctioneer cannot maintain a bill of interpleader if he insist upon retaining his commission out of the deposit; formerly the same rule applied to the auction duty. If, upon a bill filed for an injunction, the Court order the deposit to be paid into court, it will, it seems, be after deducting the auctioneer's charges and expenses; although, perhaps, this deserves re-consideration, for the purchaser's deposit may not ultimately be the fund out of which those charges are to be paid: but this is done without prejudice to any question as to so much of the deposit as is retained. Under the Interpleader Act, by which authority is given to a Court of law to make such order between the defendant and the plaintiff, as to costs and other matters, as may appear just, the Court has said, that in the first instance, upon application for a rule to interplead, the fund shall bear the costs, and the party in the wrong shall afterwards make up the fund. This operates severely against the right of a purchaser entitled to a return of his deposit. Where 1000*l.* was paid as a deposit to an auctioneer, according to the conditions of sale, and the vendor opposed two motions by the purchaser for the payment of the deposit into court, and the auctioneer became bankrupt, the loss was holden to fall on the vendor, although the second motion had succeeded, and the day named for payment of the money into court was subsequent to the bankruptcy; and perhaps a loss by the insolvency of the auctioneer will in every case fall on the vendor, who nominates him, and whose agent he properly is*. Executors or trustees selling an estate are not answerable for the loss of the deposit by the insolvency of the auctioneer, if they take proper steps in due time to recover it. Unless an auctioneer disclose the name of his principal at the time of the sale, an action will lie against him for damages on breach of contract. Generally speaking, an auctioneer is not liable for interest. An auctioneer, being only an agent, may safely pay over the proceeds of the sale to the seller, his principal, although the latter is, to his knowledge, in embarrassed circumstances. It must be a very special case in which he can set up the jus tertii. Where a man is completely the agent of the vendor, a payment to him is, in law, a payment to the principal; and in an action against the latter for the recovery of the deposit, it is immaterial whether it has actually been paid over to him or not. If, pending a suit for specific performance, a deposit be laid out in the public funds, under the authority of the Court, it will be binding on both vendor and vendee; and if laid out without opposition by the seller, it must be presumed to be with his assent; and in either case he must take the stock as he finds it. If a purchaser is entitled to a return of his deposit, he is not compellable to take the stock in which it may have been invested, unless such investment were under the authority of the Court, or with his assent; and an assent will not be implied against a party because notice was given to him of the investment, to which he made no reply. Therefore, where the deposit is considerable, and it is probable that the purchase may not be completed for a long time, it seems advisable for the parties to enter into an arrangement for the investment of it. As a vendor will not be subject to any loss by the investment of the purchase money in the funds without his assent, so he will not be entitled to any benefit by a rise in the funds, although the purchaser gave him notice of the investment, unless he (the vendor) agreed to be bound by the appropriation. No objection can be made to the whole of the deposit required by the conditions not being paid by the purchaser, if the vendor after the sale agree to accept a less sum. A purchaser has no right to elect to put an end to the agreement by forfeiting the deposit. Although the deposit be forfeited at law, yet equity will in general relieve the purchaser upon his putting the vendor in the same situation as he would have been in had the contract been performed at the time agreed upon. But if a bill by a purchaser for a specific performance is dismissed, the Court cannot order the deposit to be returned, as that would be decreeing relief; although a refusal of the seller may influence the costs. Where the seller files the bill, he submits to the jurisdiction; and although his bill is dismissed, the Court will compel him to repay the deposit, and with interest, where that ought to be paid; but of course not if he be still at liberty to bring an action for breach of contract."

We ought not to take leave of this subject without observing that the trust reposed in auctioneers by paying deposits to them has been but rarely abused; and we can by no means agree with the opinion of those universal "fusionists" who think that attornies ought to be converted into auctioneers. We do not see any necessity for such a change, and, for the sake of attornies as well as for that of auctioneers, we think it ought to be opposed.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Educational Term by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Public Lectures to be delivered by the Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History will comprise the following subjects:—

Causes of the Revolution of 1688—State of Parties at that Period—Review of the Constitutional Law—Declaration of Rights—Bill of Rights—State of the English Church—Jacobite Intrigues—Proceedings against Sir John Fenwick—Law of Treason—Triennial Act—Peace of Ryswick—Conduct of Parliament—Dismissal of Foreign Troops—Impeachment of Lord Somers—

Corruption of Public Men—Veto of the Crown—Toleration Act—Liberty of the Press—Improvements in the Constitution. If these subjects do not fill up the Term, the Reader will proceed to the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.

The works to which the Reader refers will be:—

Rapin (continued)—Millar's Constitutional History—Somerville's History—Somers' Tracts—Dalrymple's Memoirs—Hardwicke Papers—Statute Book—State Trials—Parliamentary History—Foster's Crown Law.

The Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History will deliver his Public Lectures at Lincoln's Inn Hall on Wednesday in each week, (the first Lecture to be delivered on the 17th January, 1855), commencing at two P.M. The Reader will receive his Private Classes on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings, at half-past nine, in the Benchers' Reading Room at Lincoln's Inn Hall.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Nine Lectures on the Doctrine of the Court of Chancery respecting Trusts in Real and Personal Property, including the subject of Voluntary Conveyances and Assignments; on the Rights of Married Women exclusively recognised by the Court; and on the Jurisdiction under the Sign-manual in Lunacy.

The Reader on Equity will deliver his Public Lectures at Lincoln's Inn Hall on Thursday in each week during the Educational Term, commencing at two o'clock P.M., (the first Lecture to be delivered on the 18th January, 1855). The Reader will receive his Private Classes on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings, from seven to nine o'clock, in the Benchers' Reading Room at Lincoln's Inn Hall.

LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, &c.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property, &c. proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Nine Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

I. The Accumulation Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98—Construction of the 2nd section with reference to Portions—Accumulation independent of the statute.

II. Title by Prescription—at Common Law—by stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71—Rights of Common, Way, and Light; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100—Tithes, Moduses, and Exemptions.

III. Title by Non-claim—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 29; Church Property—sects. 30, 31; Advowsons—sect. 3; Estates in Possession—sect. 28; Mortgagor and Mortgagee—sects. 3, 5; Estates in Reversion—sect. 16; Savings from Disabilities—sects. 25, 27; Trusts and Equitable Interests—sect. 40; Money charged upon Land; Legacies; Judgments—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3.

IV. Title by Descent at Common Law—alterations introduced by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106.

V. Assignment of Satisfied Terms—8 & 9 Vict. c. 112.

The Lectures to be delivered to the Private Classes will comprise the following subjects:—For the Senior Class, the text of Sugden on Powers, c. iii, s. 1, c. 18, will form the basis of the Lectures; and the latest decisions illustrating the principles there laid down will be examined and commented on. In the Junior Class, the subject of the Lectures will be "Remainders," and the text-book, 2 Cruise's Dig., tit. XVI.

The Public Lectures will be delivered at Gray's Inn Hall on Friday in each week, at two P.M., (the first Lecture to be delivered on the 19th January, 1855). The Private Classes will be held in the North Library of Gray's Inn on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings, from a quarter to twelve to a quarter to two o'clock.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law will, in the course of the ensuing Educational Term, deliver Nine Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

I. On Sovereignty—The Nature, Limits, and Criteria of Territorial Sovereignty—The History of the Conception, and its Importance in Theories of Jurisprudence—On some complex Forms of Sovereignty, with Reference more particularly to the United States of America and to the Germanic Confederation.

II. On the Law of Persons—On some Peculiarities in the Condition of early Societies, and the durable Effects which they have produced on Ancient and Modern Jurisprudence—The Power of the Father, and the Tutelage of Women and Pupils—On the Original Character and Objects of these Institutions, and the Agencies by which they were progressively modified—On Legal Fictions, and their Place in Jurisprudence—On the Prætorian Equity, and the Principles descended from it to Modern Law.

III. On the Law of Things—On the Order and Connexion of the Departments of Law—On the different Classes of Rights, and their relation to each other—On Universities of Rights, and Universal Successions—On Ownership, and its Modifications—On Obligation, Contract, and Delict.

With his Private Class the Reader proposes to discuss the Roman Law of Contracts, Testaments, and Legacies, employing as his text-book the Institutiones Juris Romani Privati of Warnkönig. It is desirable that students should provide themselves with the text of Justinian's Institutes, and of the Commentaries of Gaius; and also, if possible, with the Explication Historique des Instituts of Ortolan, or with the English edition of the Institutes by Sanders. Copies of the entire Corpus Juris will be found in the Lecture Room.

The Public Lectures will be delivered in the Hall of the Middle Temple on Tuesday in each week, at two P.M., (the first Lecture of the course on Tuesday, the 16th January, 1855).

The Private Classes will assemble at the Class-room in Garden-court on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings, from seven to nine o'clock.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the Educational Term, commencing on the 11th January, 1855, a course of Nine Public Lectures on the Law of Contracts, the subjects to be treated in which will be as under:—

Lecture I.—Remarks as to Contracts generally—their obligatory force and classification.

Lectures II and III.—Contracts of Record and by Specialty examined—Inquiry as to the Operation of the Doctrine of Merger and of Estoppel.

Lectures IV and V.—Of Contracts between Landlord and Tenant.

Lecture VI.—Of Simple Contracts, written and oral—Analysis of a Simple Contract—the request, the consideration, the promise.

Lecture VII.—Of Contracts void on the ground of illegality and of fraud.

Lectures VIII and IX.—The Capacity to contract, how affected by infancy, coverture, mental imbecility, or otherwise.

With his Private Class the Reader on Common Law proposes to discuss the Law of Contracts, according to the plan above indicated. The books to be principally made use of during this Course will be Smith's Lectures on Contracts, Chitty on Contracts, and Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

The Lectures on Common Law during the ensuing Educational Term will be delivered, and the Private Classes will meet, in the Hall of the Inner Temple, as under:—

The Public Lecture on Monday in each week, at two P.M., (the first Lecture to be delivered on the 15th January, 1855).

The Private Class on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings, from a quarter to twelve to a quarter to two o'clock.

By Order of the Council,

(Signed) EDWARD RYAN, Chairman pro tem.

Note.—The Educational Term commences on the 11th January, and ends on the 30th March, 1855.

The several Readers will receive their respective Classes on the appointed days, commencing on Monday, the 15th January.

PHOTOGRAPHY AN AID TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

MR. J. A. GARDINER, the Governor of the Bristol Gaol, has just addressed a circular to the Governors of other Gaols, stating the advantages which result from taking photographic likenesses of prisoners. We extract the following from his letter:—

"The importance of being enabled, in the cases of all hardened criminals, to prove previous convictions, must be too self-evident to dwell upon; neither does it require argument to shew that the difficulties hitherto in the way of such proofs have been always numerous, and often insurmountable.

"When the convict has been sent back for a second time to the same gaol, the required evidence has been easily procurable; but it is well known to all who have been concerned in criminal administration, that the most cunning, the most skilled, and the most daring offenders are migratory in their habits; that they do not locate themselves in a particular town or district, but extend their ravages to wherever there is the most open field for crime, or where the chances of plunder most present themselves. That this is the case will be attested by the police of almost every large city, whose experience will have failed to connect the most extensive and best-planned robberies with their resident known thieves.

"A knowledge of the foregoing truths induced me, a few years ago, to desiderate some mode by which descriptions of committed prisoners suspected of previous convictions might be circulated among the governors of leading gaols, but numerous difficulties at first presented themselves. Periodical visits of inspection might be useful, but they would have two great disadvantages—first, they would withdraw the governor or confidential officer too frequently from his gaol duties; and, secondly, they would entail expenses which the counties could not bear. Written descriptions, in very marked cases, might be effective; but, as in the great majority of instances it would be found impossible to make them sufficiently precise, they would only tend, where persons were sent to identify, to frequent disappointments and useless expense.

"Photography then suggested itself to my mind, and it became at once apparent, that if I could devise some means of making the operation sufficiently sudden, I might, in scores of cases, even without the knowledge of the prisoner, procure his likeness, a very icon of himself, of which, being capable of multiplication to any extent, I might transmit a copy to wherever it might promise to lead to useful results.

"Twelve months' continuous study of the system has enabled me to perfect it. I have now an apparatus in my gaol which I use daily. I have rendered it most subservient to the object for which it was designed, and through its use have brought to justice several hardened offenders, who, being unknown in my neighbourhood, would otherwise have escaped with inadequate punishment.

"J. H. came into the Bristol Gaol, upon commitment for trial, a perfect stranger to me and my officers; he was well attired, but very illiterate; the state of his hands convinced me that he had not done any hard work, while the superiority of his apparel over his attainments led me to suspect that he was a practised thief. I forwarded his likeness to several places, and soon received information that he had been convicted in London and Dublin. The London officer, who recognised him by his portrait, was subpoenaed as a witness, picked him out from among thirty or forty other prisoners, and gave evidence on his trial in October last, which led the Recorder to sentence him to six years' penal servitude.

"J. D. came to the gaol wholly unknown; his person and manners induced me to suspect that it was not his first appearance in a place of confinement; and, having made several copies of his portrait, I sent them round to the governors of different prisons. He was recognised as having been convicted at Wells; the necessary witness was subpoenaed, his former conviction proved, and he was sentenced to four years' penal servitude.

"I could mention several instances in which some most notorious thieves, strangers to this part, have been brought to proper punishment.

"Such having been my own experience, I now appeal to the governors of other gaols to aid me in carrying out the system upon a broad and a national scale. The cost of an apparatus complete will not exceed 10*l.*, and it may be worked at an expense of about 5*l.* per annum.

"I have only to add my wish that you should bring this communication under the notice of your visiting justices, and to say, 'Should the authorities of any district consider that I can help them, by instructing their officers in the exercise of this most useful art, I shall be happy to do so.'"

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE respectfully inform the public that the above highly-valuable and important FREEHOLD ESTATE will be offered for SALE by AUCTION in the Spring, unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract.

Auction Rooms for the Disposal of Law and Miscellaneous Libraries, and Works connected with the Fine Arts, 22, Fleet-street, London. Established Thirty Years.

SOUTHGATE and BARRETT beg respectfully to call the attention of Executors, Trustees, Booksellers, and others having Literary Property to dispose of, to the importance of their being enabled to display an entire library, even should it extend to 20,000 volumes, in one large room at the same moment; thus affording their connexion and casual visitors an opportunity to make personal selections with the greatest facility, instead of depending on the description of the catalogue. Most centrally situate, near the two principal Inns of Court, within a few doors of the Middle Temple Gate, THE FACILITIES FOR THE DISPOSAL OF LAW LIBRARIES are undeniably; whilst the immediate vicinity of the largest West-end Bankers, and being in the main thoroughfare from the City to the Court end of town, enable them to obtain the attendance of more private buyers and collectors than could be induced to visit less public premises. Books, Prints, Pictures, and, in fact, all sorts of property connected with Literature and the Fine Arts, in large or small parcels, may be transmitted to Southgate and Barrett's Rooms, and if intended for immediate sale, an advance of two-thirds of the value will be made to meet the convenience of Executors, Trustees, or others.

Auction Rooms, 22, Fleet-street, London.

PERIODICAL SALE of SHARES in the INSURANCE OFFICES connected with the LEGAL PROFESSION.—Messrs. HAMMOND & EILOART invite these gentlemen desirous of disposing of their Shares, or of becoming Shareholders in any of the Legal Offices, to forward their wishes to their Offices, No. 28, Chancery-lane, where constant applications are made for all description of Shares.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 20, 1855.

In Wenman v. Ash (17 Jur., part 1, p. 579; 22 L. J., C. P., 190) the Court of Common Pleas decided that an action is maintainable for sending a letter to a married woman containing a libel upon her husband. It was sought in vain to put the case in the same category with those, in which it had been held that sending a libel to the plaintiff himself was no publication. The Court disregarded the old fiction of unity of person, “quia sunt due anime in carne una,” and Maule, J., said, “As to the argument, that in the eye of the law husband and wife are but one person, that is not so for all purposes. If a man kills his wife he commits murder, not suicide.” In a more recent case*, in the same court, the question has been raised, whether a man is liable to an action for sending to his wife a letter containing a libel on a third person, it being shewn that he was at the time actuated by express malice against such third person. Although the parties have come to an arrangement without any judicial decision upon the point, it involves considerations of sufficient interest for us to discuss it in our pages.

There is no doubt that communications between husband and wife belong to the highest class of privileged communications, and as such they have been excepted by the recent statute (16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 3) from the testimony which husband and wife may be compelled to give against each other. The sacred character attached to words and letters which pass between persons filling this relation does not rest on any refinement or fiction of the common or canon law, but upon grounds of public policy, for the sake of domestic confidence, peace, and happiness. It differs from the privilege accorded to other communications, which are dependent upon the particular occasion on which they are made: this is independent of all occasions; it arises out of a permanent relationship, and is co-extensive with it—nay, extends beyond it; for not even after the husband's death can anything be extracted from the bosom of the wife which has been confided there by him*. The privilege is unlimited, unqualified, and may well be subject to incidents different from those which prevail with regard to ordinary privileged communications. The latter may, no doubt, be rebutted and neutralised. The protection cast around the occasion which justified the communication is removed as soon as actual malice is shewn to have instigated the party making it. There is no inconvenience, no injustice, no aggression on public policy by the adoption of this rule. But how different is the case when the conversation of the home, in the moments of unrestrained confidence, of relaxation, of “castled security,” is to be divulged in a public court, perhaps by a servant who heard the words; and all this would be done before the question of malice or no malice could be entertained. There are surely cogent reasons for not allowing this privilege to be affected even by malice itself—not for the sake of protecting malice, but of preventing investigations, the possibility of which would be a great public evil, outweighing a regard for the private injury that may have been inflicted. In O'Connor v. Marjoribanks (4 Man. & G. 445) it was held that a widow was not admissible as a witness to shew that she pledged goods by her husband's authority, in an action brought by his executors to recover the goods; and Maule, J., there (p. 445) uses words illustrative of the present question—"The text-books generally give, as the reason for the rule as to excluding the testimony of husband or wife, the necessity of preserving the confidence of the conjugal relation; and that may be so. But it by no means follows that the rule is co-extensive with the reason given in support of it; and indeed it would be very inconvenient if it were so, as the question would frequently be raised as to whether or not some particular communication or fact occurring between husband and wife was of a confidential character, which would give rise to endless embarrassment and distrust."

* See Monroe v. Twissleton, (Peake's Ev., App., xxxix); O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, (4 Man. & G. 444, per Tindal, C. J.); and Stein v. Bowman, (13 Peters, 223, Amer. Rep.)

It would not be an anomalous case were this rule to be adopted, as we believe, when the point again arises, it will be, to the full extent for which we are contending.

There are other instances of communications being so highly privileged, upon principles of public policy, as not to be affected by the presence of malice. Thus, for libels published or slander uttered in the due course of parliamentary or judicial proceedings, no action of libel or slander can be maintained, whatever may have been the malice of the defaming party. (See Lord Beauchamps v. Sir Richard Croft, Dy. 285 a; Astley v. Younge, 2 Burr. 807; Anfield v. Feverhill, 2 Bulst. 269; Roll. Ab. 87, pl. 4; 1 Stark. Libel, 246, note (u); and Stockdale v. Hansard, 9 Ad. & El. 1).

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Court of Queen's Bench (Jan. 13) discharged the rule for a criminal information obtained against Mr. Marshall, the judge of the Yorkshire County Court, for refusing to allow Mr. Shaw, a barrister, to practise before him, but discharged it without costs, and on the ground that Mr. Shaw had made a previous application in the matter to the Lord Chancellor.

In the case of Gibson v. Sturge, in the Court of Exchequer, (Jan. 13), it appeared that wheat, which had been shipped at Odessa, had become swollen by reason of moisture during the voyage, whereby it measured a greater number of quarters at the port of delivery than at the shipping port. The Court (Martin, B., dissentiente) held, that in the absence of any contract to the contrary, freight was payable on the quantity shipped, and not on the quantity delivered.

In Gore v. Bowser, Sir J. Stuart, V. C., has held (Jan. 15) that an equitable interest in leasehold property may be reached under a fi. fa. issued upon a judgment which had not been registered in pursuance of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110*.

The practice adopted during the Nisi Prius Sittings in this term is to allow execution in undefended causes to issue in four (instead of fourteen) days, when the plaintiff's counsel applies for it. Immediate execution will be granted only on production of a sufficient affidavit for that purpose.

At a meeting of the Law Amendment Society, (Jan. 15), a paper was read by Mr. Woolrych, recommending the extension of the summary jurisdiction of magistrates to all cases of petty larceny.

At a meeting of the Statistical Society, (Jan. 15), Dr. Waddilove read a paper upon the Law of Blockade.

Mr. W. S. Lindsay, M.P., addressing a meeting at Tynemouth on the 11th January, observed that the form of the charterparty still used in England was verbatim the same as in the days of the Dutch war and Lord Camperdown; but the French adopted a simple form, like that used in the merchant service, and were in this respect greatly in advance of us.

Fifteen of the sixty county court judges have had their salaries raised to the maximum, 1500*l.*, instead of the minimum, 1200*l.* per annum.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In your leading article in last Saturday's JURIST (18 Jur., part 2, p. 521) you notice the act of the 27 Hen. 6, c. 5, prohibiting the holding of fairs on Sundays, "the four Sundays in harvest except."

I infer, from the omission of all notice of it, that you have overlooked a recent act repealing the exception, and take the liberty of directing your attention to it.

The act I refer to is the 13 Vict. c. 23, which, after reciting the 27 Hen. 6, c. 5, enacts, "that the exception of the four Sundays in harvest contained in the said act shall be repealed, and the said act shall be construed as if such exception were not inserted therein."

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ARTHUR JOHN WOOD.

PHOTOGRAPHY A CRIMINAL DETECTOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The importance of applying the discoveries of science to the detection of criminals, and the prevention of future crime, will be sufficient excuse for my troubling you with the inclosed extract from the Glasgow Daily Mail, which will form an appropriate "rider" to the paragraph which appeared upon this subject in your last week's paper. The former mode of "taking a prisoner's likeness" was, on his admission, to place him in an ante-room, and for all the officers of the gaol to pass by him—a dismal train, like the ghosts that appeared before Macbeth—until they had become acquainted with his personal lineaments. But such a likeness was not transmissible from prison to prison. The doers of dark deeds will hate the light more than ever, when it not only discloses their present actions, but throws its full glare upon their antecedent history. The extract is as follows:—

"We lately called attention to the circumstance, that Captain Smart, the superintendent of police in Glasgow, contemplated the introduction of a system of taking the portraits of the thieves and vagabonds who passed through his hands, by the photographic process, for the purpose of facilitating their detection and of bringing them to justice, in the event of their removing to other localities. We were then shewn an earnest of that gentleman's intentions in a very authentic likeness of an old Welsh beggar, who had been picked up for sorning. Since that period, however, the subject has been in abeyance. From the first we saw it was beset with difficulties, but we hesitated not to say that these would disappear before the progress of the art, and that photography would eventually be turned to good account in detecting and repressing crime. A short time ago an Edinburgh contemporary very clearly pointed out the change which crime had assumed since the introduction of railroads and steamers. It had become much more migratory and peripatetic in its character. New classes of thieves had sprung up, designed to suit the changed habits of the people, on the plunder of whom they existed. One class continuously travelled by steamer, while another was closely attached to railway stations. These never confined their operations to one part of the country for any length of time, but were continually changing their habitats to avoid detection. Our contemporary proposed to meet this growing and dangerous evil by establishing a national police, to be composed of men who, without assuming any distinctive uniform by which they could be recognised as police detectives, might travel anywhere and everywhere over the great channels of conveyance throughout the country, and who would make it their study to dodge, hunt down, and bring to justice those migratory professional thieves. The scheme is plausible, and well fitted to root out the evil; but it is nevertheless yet far distant, for it could only be introduced by a considerable change in the present police machinery of the country, which we see no early prospect of obtaining. As an approximation to this system, however, the photographic plan offers great advantages, in illustration of which we might give a case which occurred last week, where a young man and woman were convicted before one of our police courts of shoplifting, and sent for sixty days to prison. The offence was a grave one, and the award was the extreme limit the magistrate could give. The prisoners were total strangers to the police. One gentleman, however, connected with the detective force, perhaps from motives of curiosity, communicated a minute description of them to the Dublin police, suspecting from the accent of the prisoners that they came from that city. The result proved that the man had been no less than eighteen times in prison in Dublin, twelve of these for thefts, and the woman six times in prison for the same offence; in short, that they were professional thieves, who had just changed the scene of their predations from Dublin to Glasgow. Had this been known before their case was disposed of, they could have been dealt with as habit and repute thieves; but under the present system they may pass on from one locality to another, running the course of the petty courts, and being treated as persons brought up for the first time, instead of being transferred to the highest criminal court in the country, and disposed of in terms of their deserts. Now, the said photography would give in discovering the real character of such offenders will be at once apparent. A mutual interchange of portraits of noted thieves would form a most valuable and interesting pertinent of the police establishment of a great city."

To Correspondents.

WE have received several letters from esteemed correspondents upon the subject of the alterations which we have adopted with regard to the form of THE JURIST. While in the main approving of them, they advise us "stare super antiquas vias" with reference to the Table of Cases at the commencement of each number. We should be happy to comply with this suggestion, but the space required for advertisements precludes the possibility of our doing so; we have, however, made the Index, as will be seen, more distinctive than in our last number.

In future the outer pages, containing the advertisements, will not be paged, and the number of THE JURIST will be placed at the foot of the first page of the Reports.

We are much obliged to those gentlemen who have favoured us with their suggestions, which we shall at all times be happy to receive.

REGULÆ GENERALES.

ORDERS IN LUNACY.—Jan. 12, 1855.

I, ROBERT MONSEY BAYON CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, intrusted, by virtue of her Majesty the Queen's sign-manual, with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, do, with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE and the Right Hon. Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, also being intrusted as aforesaid, and by virtue and in exercise of the powers or authorities in this behalf vested in me by the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, and of every other power or authority in anywise enabling me in this behalf, order as follows:—

I. That the Masters in Lunacy do from time to time furnish the visitors of lunatics with abstracts of their reports as to the fortune, income, and maintenance of each lunatic, and of the orders confirming such reports, and inform the said visitors of any increase which may have accrued in the fortune of, and of any change which may have been made in the allowance or scheme for the maintenance of, any lunatic, so that at all times the said visitors may be fully acquainted with the amount of the fortune and income of every lunatic, and with the scheme approved and the allowance made for his maintenance.

II. That the medical visitors of lunatics do, on each occasion of visiting any lunatic, inquire and examine whether such lunatic is maintained in a suitable and proper manner, having regard to the then existing amount of the allowance ordered to be paid, and the then existing scheme approved of, for the maintenance of such lunatic; and also whether, having regard to the then fortune and income of such lunatic, it appears expedient that any and what addition should be made to his comforts, or any and what alterations should be made in the scheme for or manner of his maintenance.

III. That if the said visitors shall on such inquiry and examination consider that the lunatic is not maintained in such suitable and proper manner as is aforesaid; or that the allowance provided for his maintenance is not duly applied; or that any provision in the scheme for his maintenance, either for his personal comfort or enjoyment or otherwise, is not duly observed; or that any addition to the comforts, or any alteration in the manner of the maintenance, of the lunatic should be made, which his then fortune or income is capable of providing, they shall forthwith make a special report, stating such their opinion, and the grounds thereof, to the board of visitors.

IV. That the board of visitors shall proceed to consider such report of the medical visitors at their next meeting, and shall, if they think fit, refer the same to the Masters in Lunacy, or take such other steps thereon as may appear to them to be expedient.

V. That the Masters in Lunacy shall, on any such report as aforesaid being referred to them by the board of visitors, proceed to investigate the matters thereby reported upon, and may, if they deem it expedient, summon the committee of the person or estate to attend before them to give explanations thereon; and the said Masters shall then make such report, if any, on the said matters to the Lord Chancellor, as the said Masters may deem proper.

VI. That the medical visitors do, in the annual report made by them to the Lord Chancellor in the case of each lunatic, pursuant to the Lunacy Regulation Act, state the result of the examination and inquiry as to the maintenance of each lunatic to be made by them pursuant to the foregoing order; and do also, in any case in which they shall have made any special report to the board of visitors pursuant to the above order, state, so far as they may be able, what steps have been taken in consequence of such special report.

ORDER OF COURT.—Jan. 13, 1855.

The Right Hon. ROBERT MONSEY Lord CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, doth hereby, in pursuance and execution of the powers of an act of Parliament passed in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery," and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct that all and every the rules, orders, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, General Rules and Orders of the High Court of Chancery, viz.:

Introductory.

I. The course of proceeding prescribed by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the General Order of the 7th day of August, 1852, with respect to the mode of examining witnesses, and the practice of the Court in relation thereto, are altered in the manner and to the extent prescribed by these Orders, but not further or otherwise.

II. The Orders numbered respectively 31, 32, and 33, comprised in the General Order of the 7th day of August, 1852, and all other Orders and parts of Orders, so far as such other Orders and parts of Orders are inconsistent with these Orders, but not further or otherwise, are hereby abrogated and discharged.

III. All former Orders and parts of Orders, not specified in Order 2, so far as the same are now in force, and consistent with these Orders, are to remain in full force and effect.

Evidence.

IV. It shall not be competent for the plaintiff or any defendant to require, by notice or otherwise, that the evidence to be adduced in a cause shall be taken orally; but when issue shall have been joined in any cause the plaintiff and defendant respectively shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases, either wholly or partially by affidavit, or wholly or partially by the oral examination of witnesses, before one of the examiners of the Court, or before an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court.

V. The evidence on both sides in any cause, to be used at the hearing thereof, whether taken upon affidavit or orally, (and including the cross-examination and re-examination of any witness or witnesses), is to be closed within eight weeks after issue joined therein, except that any witness, who has made an affidavit intended to be used by any party to such cause at the hearing thereof, shall be subject to cross-examination within one month after the expiration of such period of eight weeks.

VI. No affidavit or deposition filed or made before issue joined in any cause shall, without special leave of the Court, be received at the hearing thereof, unless within one month after issue joined, or within such longer time as may be allowed by special leave of the Court, notice in writing shall have been given by the party intending to use the same, to the opposite party, of his intention in that behalf.

VII. In suits in which issue shall have been joined when these Orders take effect, the evidence to be used at the hearing of the cause shall be taken according to the present practice of the Court, unless the parties shall consent, or the Court shall order, that the same shall be taken in the altered mode prescribed by these Orders.

Affidavits.

VIII. All affidavits, whether to be used at the hearing of a cause, or on any other proceeding before the Court, are to state distinctly what facts or circumstances deposed to are within the deponent's own knowledge, and his means of knowledge, and what parts or circumstances deposed to are known to or believed by him by reason of information derived from other sources than his own knowledge, and what such sources are.

IX. The costs of affidavits not in conformity with the preceding Order are to be disallowed on taxation, unless the Court should otherwise direct.

X. These Orders shall be deemed to apply as nearly as may be to evidence taken after the hearing of a cause, as well as to evidence taken previously, and with a view to such hearing.

XI. These Orders shall take effect on and after the 21st day of January, 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 27, 1855.

THE charges of our judges to grand juries at the assizes possess a peculiar value. In addition to special observations upon the calendar before them, they generally take the opportunity of tracing the prominent causes of crime, and the means which tend to their removal. The words come from those who have themselves fought the battle of life in its hottest arena, and whose experience of human nature in its fallen state prevents them alike from exaggerating its strength or its weakness.

The charge of Mr. Baron Alderson to the grand jury of Yorkshire at the Winter Assizes of 1854 presents these characteristics in an eminent degree*. The kind heart of the judge has been deeply touched by the injustice of society committed towards its offending members. The hand which holds the scales of justice may well tremble—nay, be paralysed—at the contemplation of the wrongs inflicted upon the criminal, as well as by him. The theme—thanks to the men and women who have pressed it upon public attention—has no longer the excitement of novelty, but it is one of such paramount interest that it recurs again and again to the reflecting mind, and imposes obligations which no individual can shift from himself, either upon his neighbour or upon the Government. This is especially the case since the Legislature have armed the public with fitting weapons for its warfare against crime. It was the statute of last session, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 86), "for the better care and reformation of youthful offenders in Great Britain," that the learned judge selected as the subject of his address. After showing, by extracts from Combe's "Principles of Criminal Legislation," that short terms of imprisonment are injurious to the prisoner as well as to the public, and that very encouraging results have already been attained by judicious efforts for reclaiming offenders, his Lordship pointed out, that by the operation of this statute a lengthened term of detention might be imposed upon the young, but in a school, and not in a prison, and that wide and lasting benefits might reasonably be expected from the adoption of a course recommended alike by justice and expediency.

The statute in question recites, that "reformatory schools for the better training of juvenile offenders have been and may be established by voluntary contributions in various parts of Great Britain, and it is expedient that more extensive use should be made of such institutions;" and enacts, that upon application made to the Secretary of State by the managers of any such institution, he may direct an inspector of prisons to report upon its condition and regulations; and if it appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State, and be certified by him, to be useful and efficient for its purpose, it is to be a reformatory school within the provisions of the act. To such schools any person under sixteen years of age, convicted upon indictment or on summary conviction, may, in addition to the sentence passed as a punishment for his offence, be directed by the Court to be sent at the expiration of such sentence, and be there detained for a period not less than two years, and not exceeding five years. The preliminary sentence must be imprisonment for fourteen days at the least, and the Secretary of State may at any time order a discharge from the school. Power is given to the Treasury to defray the cost of care and maintenance of the offender while within the reformatory school; but the Court by which he is ordered to be detained is to charge his parent or step-parent, if of sufficient ability, with a sum not exceeding 5s. per week for that purpose. In order to compel such payment, the provisions of the Poor Laws are extended to the act. The statute does not extend to Ireland. With regard to Scotland, a statute of the same session (c. 74) enacts, that vagrant children may be sent to a reformatory or industrial school, unless security be found for their good behaviour, and provides for their compulsory detention until the age of fifteen years or lawful discharge, and also for the expenses, to be recovered from those who are liable to support them. Power is given to the Education Committee of the Privy Council to grant aid to the directors of such schools in Scotland.

"I have spoken hitherto of young offenders," said his Lordship upon the occasion alluded to, "but the same principle, mutatis mutandis, is true for the adults also. An adult convict is but an overgrown wicked child, who has erred from inherently vicious dispositions, defective instruction, or evil example. He is only in his habits and organisation a child grown larger and stronger, but the same method of reforming him must be, as for children, to change his habits—to excite his powers, dormant as yet, of moral restraint by firm and wholesome severity, accompanied, however, with kindness. Depend on it he has a heart, though at present incrustated over, and insensible from misery perhaps, and vice.

"Try to touch that heart—let him feel that though you punish you do it for his good—substitute firm and gentle severity for mere unreasoning vengeance, and cultivate what still is left of moral power originally possessed by him. Quench not the smoking flax of his agonised repentance, and you will have a good chance of success even with him. But treat him firmly—do not spare to make him suffer for his crime. What he wants is moral power to resist temptation. In this, as it seems to me, the evil of penitentiaries, which are solely dependent on the effect of separate imprisonment, consists. The defect of mere separate imprisonment is this, that the patient is by it too often subdued, but not reformed. He still wants the strength which social habits alone can give him, to fit him for a return to the world from which he has been shut out for a long period. He is, perhaps, convalescent, but not cured; and it ends too often in a fatal relapse. Besides, it is a discipline which does not suit all; some require to be subdued, others to be supported; and for this reason there should be some prison or penitentiary in which, after separate confinement, the prisoner should carefully and gradually be accustomed to work in common with others before his ultimate discharge. For the most part he should be subjected to hard labour, skilled or otherwise, for this is the best remedy and security against relapse; not, as I think, to be unaccompanied with some profit arising from that labour, and given to the criminal. God governs us all by rewards as well as punishments; why should we not, at however remote a distance, try to follow the course of His government, which is always the wisest and best?

"I have now, perhaps at too great a length, offered some suggestions on these important subjects to you. I wish you to turn them in your own intelligent minds. You may not agree with me, but at least to think about them will conduce to settle your minds on the question, and that will be a great good attained. By discussion we shall make an approach to the truth. I commend the subject to you, hoping that at least you will take into consideration what the Legislature, not I alone, have laid before you, as to the institution of reformatory schools throughout the length and breadth of the country. I believe them to be as necessary appendages to every good gaol as the doors, or the locks, or the treadmill, and far more effectual."

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In Towns and Another v. Mead (C. P., Jan. 18) it has been decided, that where there are two joint contractors, and one is abroad at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until his death or his return to this country.

In Steel v. Haddock (Exch., Jan. 18) a plea on equitable grounds was allowed to be pleaded to an action of trover, to the effect that the goods had been intended to have been sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, but by mistake had been omitted from the contract, although the defendant had paid the purchase money. The Court, however, did not express any opinion as to the validity of the plea.

In Hawkins v. Gathercole, the Lords Justices have held, (Jan. 19), contrary to the opinion of the present Lord Chancellor when he was Vice-Chancellor, that a judgment registered under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, does not create a charge upon an ecclesiastical benefice. In Lord Justice Turner's judgment there are some valuable observations upon the construction of statutes in general.

In Hill v. Swift, the Court of Exchequer (Jan. 17) has decided that a judge of a county court has no right to amend the particulars of demand by reducing the sum claimed to 50*l.*, so as to give himself jurisdiction. Awards v. Rhodes (8 Exch. 312) was cited and acted upon.

In Walton v. Borthwick (Com. P., Jan. 22) an order for goods was given in Oxford to a traveller for a Manchester house, together with express directions for them to be delivered at the railway station at Manchester. By leave of the judge, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 60, an action was brought for the price in the Manchester County Court. It was held that the Court had no jurisdiction to try it, as under the section in question the whole cause of action must arise in the district of trial; and the order, which was part of the cause of action, was given in Oxford. We have received a letter upon this case, in which our correspondent states that, if acted upon, it will cut up largely county court practice, as about fifty cases a week come before a county court with which he is acquainted which are decided upon in a manner contrary to this view of the Court of Common Pleas. A similar point is now pending before the Court of Exchequer. The county court judges have few questions of more difficulty to decide than those which arise under this section as to the meaning of the words "cause of action."

Mr. Keogh has written, in answer to an inquiry upon the subject, that there is no express exemption from the stamp laws in favour of receipts given for subscriptions to charitable institutions, but that where the sum acknowledged to have been received is a mere voluntary gift, not entitling the person making the payment to any advantage, the acknowledgment may be regarded as not liable to stamp duty. The nature of the gift, he says, should be expressed in the acknowledgment. It seems, however, clear, that whether so expressed or not, no stamp is necessary for a receipt unless it be of money paid in discharge of a *pre-existing liability.

Errors will be taken from the Court of Common Pleas on Thursday and Friday, the 1st and 2nd February, and from the Exchequer on Monday, the 5th February, and such following days as may be necessary. There are no errors from the Queen's Bench.

The Exchequer will sit in Banc on Monday, the 5th February, and three following days, to hear arguments in the Special and New Trial Papers; and also on Tuesday, the 13th, for the purpose of delivering judgments solely.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

HILARY TERM.—18 VICTORIA.—Jan. 22, 1855.

This Court will, on Tuesday, the 6th day of February next, and the two following days, hold sittings, and will then proceed with the cases remaining unheard at the end of the term in the Special, Crown, and New Trial Papers, beginning with the New Trial Paper. The Court will also hold a sitting on Thursday, the 22nd day of February next, for the purpose of giving judgments only.

THE METROPOLITAN BUILDINGS ACT, 7 & 8 VICT. c. 84.

[From the Builder, Jan. 20, 1855.]

Our London readers, at all events, are aware that for some time past differences have prevailed between the official referees and the registrar of metropolitan buildings, which have greatly impeded the proper execution of the law, have tended to bring it into disrepute, and have increased the difficulties of the district surveyors. The operation of the differences of opinion is, that on considering the decisions come to by the referees, the registrar conceives, in various cases, that they have proceeded erroneously, and refuses to seal their awards. When sent to the Board of Works, the Board sometimes authorise the registrar to affix his seal of office to the intercepted documents, thus overruling his objections, but more commonly confirm his refusal of the seal, and the whole of the litigation is thus suspended. The Board of Works have at times intimated to the referees that it was their duty either to alter the already executed documents, or else to make others; but the referees felt they could not do so. The latter offered, however, to record any decree avowedly on the responsibility of the Board of Works acting as an appellate court; but this was declined.

In party-wall cases, of great importance to individuals, a special difficulty was found. Unless there is error on the face of the certificate given by the district surveyor, or an appeal is brought by one of the parties, its confirmation by the official referees is a matter of course, and they consider there should clearly be no hearing of the parties on it. But the registrar thinks differently, and withholds the seal from certificates of confirmation on that ground; although, if the parties did appear, and the official referees heard them, the decision of the official referees is made final by the 24th section.

Under these circumstances, the referees thought it necessary to obtain the opinion of counsel, and a case was prepared and submitted to Sir Richard Bethell, Solicitor-General, Mr. Serjeant Byles, and Mr. Charles Winston. The question mainly was as to the nature of the control over the acts of the referees vested in the registrar and the Board of Works; and we give so much of their reply as answers this. The remainder advises as to the mode in which the referees should take the opinion of a Court of law upon it:—

"We are of opinion that the instruments required to be sealed, under sect. 89, are of two classes:—

"First, certificates, summonses, and consents granted by the official referees, and expressly required to be sealed, by sects. 15, 16, 85, and 117.

"Secondly, an award, when it is proposed to enforce it by process from the Court of Queen's Bench, (sect. 83), and a copy of it when wanted for evidence, (sect. 86)."

Over the first class of documents the registrar and the commissioners have a controlling power. The registrar may refuse to affix his seal of office, where on the face of it the document appears to him contrary to law, or where it is informal or manifestly ultra vires. The commissioners may review the registrar's decision, but must proceed on the same grounds.

But over the second class of documents, viz. awards and copies of awards, we are of opinion that neither registrar nor commissioners have any controlling power, but that the duty of the registrar to fix the seal is purely ministerial.

We are further of opinion, that, upon a submission to the referees in their judicial character of a question between party and party, as soon as they have once made their award they are functi officio; that they can neither make a second award nor (which is really the same thing) alter their first award; and more than that, we think it would be very dangerous for them to attempt it, for in an action for damages for acts done under the authority and direction of an altered award they might be unable to shelter themselves under the protection of the act of Parliament.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 3, 1855.

THE question what is a "cause of action" within the meaning of the County Court Act has been before our superior courts on several recent occasions. It has arisen under sect. 60 of the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, by which a summons may issue, by leave of the judge, into what may be called "a foreign district," although the defendant does not reside there, provided the cause of action arose within it. These words, it will be observed, differ from those which are used in the concurrent clause, (sect. 128), which entitles the plaintiff to sue in the superior courts when the cause of action did not wholly, or in some material point, arise within the district in which the defendant dwells. Accordingly it has been held, that the "cause of action" in the former section means whole cause of action, and unless it wholly arise in the foreign district, the judge has no jurisdiction to try it. It is therefore analogous to the cause of action upon application to change the venue on the common affidavit, viz. that the cause of action arose wholly in the county to which it is sought to change the venue; or to the cause of action within the old inferior jurisdictions, in which case it was necessary to allege every material traversable fact to have occurred within it. (Com. Dig., "Courts," P. (9); Peacock v. Bell, 1 Wms. Saund. 74 a). It also appears to resemble the "cause of action" within the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, which means a complete, and not merely an inchoate, cause of action.

No. 4, VOL. I., NEW SERIES.

The latest case upon this subject is that of Hernaman v. Smith, in the Exchequer, on Saturday last. The action was brought "by leave," under the 60th section, in the Newnham district of the Gloucestershire County Court, to recover a reward for the apprehension of a felon. It appeared that a placard had been issued by the defendant offering the reward "for the apprehending" of the felon, and it contained the words "payment to be made on conviction." The apprehension was shewn to have taken place in Newnham, but the conviction took place in Hereford, out of the Newnham district. The Court held, that the conviction was part of the cause of action, and therefore that it did not arise wholly within the Newnham district, and granted a writ of prohibition. The grounds of the judgment appear to have been, that the plaintiff could not recover until conviction, that the Statute of Limitations would not run until that time, and that in an action in the superior courts the plaintiff must have alleged that such conviction had taken place—an allegation which was material and traversable. The Court fully recognised and acted upon the decision in the Common Pleas a few days previously, (Walton v. Borthwick, Jan. 22), in which an order for goods having been given in Oxford to a traveller for a Manchester house, and the goods having been sent from Manchester by railway, according to the defendant's request, it was held, that the whole cause of action did not arise, under the section in question, in Manchester. The order was a verbal one, although required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, the value of the goods being above 10l.; but this did not, we understand, affect the decision, which proceeded on the ground that the sale or order was a part of the cause of action.

In Re Fuller (2 El. & Bl. 575) an action was brought in the county court for a legacy against an administrator. The plaintiff claimed under a will which had been made, and the testator had died, in district A., but the executor had renounced, and letters of administration had been granted to the defendant in district B. The Court of Queen's Bench held, that the grant of the letters of administration was a part of the cause of action. Crompton, J., cited the case of Murray v. The East India Company, (5 B. & Ad. 204), which was a decision to the effect, that in an action by an administrator on a bill of exchange payable to the intestate, but accepted after his death, the Statute of Limitations ran only from the time of the grant of the letters of administration, as until that period there was no person in existence capable of suing on the bill.

In Buckley v. Hann (5 Exch. 43) a bill of exchange had been drawn and accepted, and the indorser had put his name upon it in the city of London, but he delivered it to the indorsee in Middlesex. It was held that the cause of action in the indorsee against the acceptor did not arise wholly in the city, because there was no indorsement until delivery. (See Marston v. Allen, 8 M. & W. 494). Part of the cause of action is the acceptance, and therefore the action cannot be brought by leave in the district in which the bill was delivered or issued, where it is a different one from that in which it was accepted. (Wilde v. Sheridan, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 426; S. C., nom. Re Birch, 1 B. C. 56*.)

To these decisions may be added that of Barnes v. Marshall, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 1086; 21 L. J., Q. B., 388), in which the facts were as follow:—A carrier and wharfinger at Swindon agreed with M., who lived in Surrey, to barge timber from Swindon Wharf to London. It was necessary to haul the timber from where it lay to be loaded in the barges. A plaint was brought in the Swindon district, by leave, against M., and included two items for hauling. It was held that the hauling and carriage constituted but one cause of action, which did not arise until the delivery of the timber in London; therefore that there was no jurisdiction to try the case in the Swindon district.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Court of Exchequer (Jan. 26) have made the rule absolute for a new trial in the case of Boyle v. Wiseman, deciding that the Chief Baron was wrong in refusing to allow the defendant to be examined, and in rejecting secondary evidence of a letter in the possession of a person out of the jurisdiction, and which the plaintiff had used due diligence to obtain.

For the decision of the same Court (Jan. 27) upon the "cause of action" in sect. 60 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, see Leading Article.

Several cases of importance have been decided upon the subject of interrogatories, for which we refer our readers to the Reports in our present Number.

In Reg. v. Hicks (Q. B., Jan. 25) the defendant had been convicted of an offence against the Market Act of Torquay, in Devon, upon an information laid by one of the inhabitants not connected with the Market Company, to whom the penalty was to be paid. The Court held, upon the construction of the act, that the Market Company only could lay the information.

In Reg. v. Frere (Q. B., Jan. 24) it appeared that the Eastern Union Railway Company, on account of competition, charged a less fare for travelling from A. to C., sixty miles, than from A. to B., forty miles of the sixty. The defendant, knowing this, paid for a ticket from A. to C., but got out at B. A conviction against him, under a bye-law of the company, for entering a carriage without paying the fare, was quashed.

In Jenkins v. Beetham (C. P., Jan. 31) it has been held, that although surveyors of ecclesiastical property, employed to value as between outgoing and incoming tenants, need not have an accurate knowledge of the law, or therefore of the rule laid down in very recent judicial decisions, yet they should have an accurate knowledge of the principle of valuing ecclesiastical property, as such, between incoming and outgoing tenants.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly has moved (Q. B., Jan. 31) for the renewal of the certificate of Mr. W. H. Barber. He stated that the motion was made on new matter of so important a character, that he could not but entertain a confident hope that the application would be successful. The second day of next term was appointed for the motion.

In Re Bates, (Jan. 27), Mr. Commissioner Phillips has decided, after consultation with Mr. Commissioner Murphy, that no bankrupt shall be allowed to apply to the Insolvent Court until he has obtained his certificate.

The conflict of jurisdictions between county courts and the insolvent court has been settled by Mr. Commissioner Murphy, (Re Christy, Jan. 25), so far as he is concerned, by his refusing to interfere on behalf of a person committed by a county court judge in respect of a debt from which he had been discharged in the insolvent court. The learned commissioner acted upon Abley v. Dale, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 427), in which the Court of Common Pleas had decided, that in such cases the county court had jurisdiction under sect. 98 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and might commit the defendant as upon an unsatisfied judgment. The Court of Queen's Bench, upon an application to discharge the defendant, (Jan. 31), expressed an opinion in favour of the ruling in the case in the Common Pleas.

The conflict between the powers of coroner, magistrate, and commissioner of police, as to the custody of a prisoner, has been again brought before the public in the case of Baranelli, charged with the murder of Joseph Latham.

In Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Fulford (Bail Court, Jan. 30) an application for a certiorari to remove an indictment for non-repair of a highway was refused, because the affidavit did not state that a fair and impartial trial could not be had in the court below, or that some question of more than usual difficulty and importance was likely to arise on the trial, or that a view of the premises was required, or that a special jury was necessary for a satisfactory trial. One or other of these allegations is required by a statute where à priori no mention of the subject would have been expected, viz. that for preventing aggravated assaults upon women and children, (16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 4).

In the Admiralty Court, (Jan. 27), Dr. Lushington has given judgment in one of the Baltic blockade cases, The Franciska, a Danish schooner, which had been captured while endeavouring to enter a blockaded port. Restitution was claimed on the grounds (inter alia) that the blockade had been neither a legal nor an effective

* In which Coleridge, J., cited the words of Paul Voet, with reference to the lex loci contractus in such case—"Quid si de literis cambii incidat questio; quis locus erit spectendus? In spectendus est locus, ad quem sunt destinatæ, et ibidem acceptatæ."

one, and also that the vessels of Denmark and Sweden were entitled to special privileges under an old treaty. The learned judge, however, pronounced against the claim, first, because the blockade was notorious; and, secondly, because the master, having deposed falsely, and having been on his way with a full knowledge of the blockade, was deprived of any benefit from the treaty.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—As most legal subjects are undergoing more or less scrutiny and revision, would it not be very advantageous to the Profession and public to have a revision of our Stamp Laws, instead of act after act being session after session passed, and so much confusion added to a matter already very much confused?

Without expressing any opinion as to the merits or demerits of "codification" generally, surely there can be but one correct opinion as to the advantages to be derived from a codification of the numerous statutes relating to stamp duties. The subject is, from its very nature, one that could and should be reduced to a certain standard, and clear and concise tables framed which would tell at a glance what duty is applicable to any case.

None can deny that it is a subject of the greatest importance, nor that a remedy for the cure of the disease is very simple. The fact is patent to every practitioner in conveyancing, that after the greatest amount of pains has been expended in the preparation of his draft, he has considerable difficulty in deciding what stamp duties to mark upon it; and when his mind has arrived at a conclusion, it is with considerable doubt as to its correctness.

There is no denying that the act of the 13 & 14 Vict. was a boon to that portion of the public interested in the alienation of property, especially to small purchasers and mortgagors, and consequently very much increased the number of assurances; but it left many things untouched that should speedily be dealt with. By way of illustration, (if such be needed), I may mention an instance occurring to the conveyancer almost every day of his professional life, in the use of the so-called "common deed stamp." Now, 1*l.* 15*s.* is sadly too large an amount in very many small matters where that stamp is indispensable.

A case is this moment under my eye, where it becomes necessary to appoint a new trustee to property of very small amount, consisting of a freehold house and garden, and a leasehold piece of land, a simple conveyance and assignment of which would be subject only to an ad valorem duty of about 15*s.*; but the common deed stamp will be necessary; added to which, by a fiction of law, the legal estate in leaseholds cannot be divested from the old trustee, and vested in him and a new trustee, without a mesne or intermediate assignment, (as a use cannot be declared, as in the case of a freehold); so that an additional stamp will be required. This is a severe tax upon so small a fund for simply adding a new trustee.

You will excuse me drawing attention to a question which must necessarily suggest itself to the mind of every one having the most limited experience in this branch of the law; but I do so that your powerful aid may be invoked to bring about some efficient remedy for a palpable wrong.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. H. S.

REGULÆ GENERALES

As to the Forms of Proceedings and Process, made pursuant to the Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 4, intitled "An Act for the better Regulation of the Traffic on Railways and Canals."

[IN THE COMMON PLEAS AT WESTMINSTER.]

I. Every application made under this act to the Court shall be for a rule calling upon the company or companies complained of to shew cause why a writ of injunction should not issue against such company or companies, enjoining them to do, or to desist from doing, the thing required to be done, or the thing the doing of which is complained of by the company or person making such application; and every application made under this act to a judge at chambers shall be by summons, calling upon the company or companies complained of to shew cause in like manner, which summons shall be granted only upon affidavit, and upon a statement made to the judge, in like manner as upon an application to the Court for a rule to shew cause.

II. If, on the hearing of any such rule or summons, the court or judge shall think fit to direct and prosecute inquiries into the matter thereof, under the 3rd section of this act, the order for that purpose shall be in the following terms, or to the like effect, the rule or summons being enlarged until such further day as the court or judge shall think fit, in order that in the meantime such inquiries may be made and reported on:—

"In the Common Pleas.

"In the matter of the complaint of A. B. [or, of the — Company] against the — Company.—It is ordered that C. D., Esq., engineer, [or as the case may be], do forthwith make such inquiries into the matter of this complaint as may be necessary to enable the Court [or, the Honourable Mr. Justice —] to determine the same, and do report thereon to the Court [or, to the said Mr. Justice —] on or before the — day of — next.

"Dated this — day of —, 18—."

III. Office copies of all the affidavits filed by either party on the hearing of such rule or summons shall, at the expense of such party, be furnished to the person appointed to make such inquiries, within three days after the making of such order as aforesaid.

IV. The parties shall be entitled to be again heard by the court or judge upon the said report, but no fresh affidavits shall be allowed on such hearing, unless by leave of the court or a judge.

V. Every writ of injunction issued under this act shall be in the following form, or to the like effect:—

"Victoria, &c., to the — Company, their agents and servants, and every of them, greeting.—Whereas A. B. [or, the — Company] hath lately complained before us, in our Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, of a violation and contravention by you, the said company, of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854; that is to say, in [state the act or omission complained of]: and whereas, upon the hearing of such complaint, the same hath been found to be true: we do, therefore, strictly enjoin and command you, the said — Company, and your agents and servants, and every one of you, that you, and every one of you, do from henceforth altogether absolutely desist from [state the matter for the injunction where an act done is complained of] [or, that you, and every one of you, forthwith do (state the matter for the injunction where an omission is complained of)] until our said Court shall make order to the contrary. Witness, Sir John Jervis, Knight, at Westminster, the — day of —, in the year of our Lord 18—."

VI. If the court or judge shall think fit also to make an order directing the payment of a sum of money by the company or companies complained of, such order shall be in the following form, or to the like effect:—

“In the Common Pleas.

“In the matter of the complaint of — against the — Company.—It is ordered that the said — Company do pay to the said — [or, into court, to abide the ultimate decision of the Court in the matter of the said complaint, or, to the use of her Majesty] the sum of £— for every day after the — day of — instant that the said company shall fail to obey a certain writ of injunction dated this day, and issued against the said company at the instance of the said —.

“Dated this — day of —, 18—.”

VII. If such money be ordered to be paid into court, to abide the ultimate decision of the Court, the same shall, upon the ultimate decision of the Court being made, be paid out of court either to the party complaining, or to the use of her Majesty, or to the company by which the same was paid into court, as the court or judge shall direct.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 10, 1855.

THE sentence pronounced upon Godsall v. Boldero by the unanimous judgment of the Exchequer Chamber last December in the case of Dalby v. The India and London Life Assurance Company, reported and commented upon in our number for the 9th December, 1854, (18 Jur., No. 935), has received the approval of the other side of Westminster Hall, and been followed by Sir W. P. Wood, V.C., in a case very recently before him. The case to which we allude was Law v. The London Indisputable Life Policy Company, (not yet reported), the facts of which, from their great simplicity, afford perhaps a more conclusive test and refutation of the principle supposed to have been established by Godsall v. Boldero than was even done by the case before the Exchequer Chamber. The circumstances of the case were shortly these:—Mr. Law, the plaintiff, had purchased a legacy of 3000*l.*, to which his son was entitled upon the contingency of his living to complete thirty years. Being anxious to secure himself against the loss of the 3000*l.* by the death of his son before the time pointed out by the contingency, the plaintiff applied to the Indisputable Life Policy Company, attracted, no doubt, by the glowing words of promise contained in their prospectus, which proclaimed to the world that their policies were indefeasible and indisputable, and that no extent of error, mistake, or omission would induce the company to repudiate payment, the fact of issuing the policy being conclusive evidence of its validity. As if, too, this was not sufficient to remove all lurking doubt, the following significant paragraph was also contained in the prospectus:—"Interest in policies.—A party having had an interest in the life assured shall not lose the benefit of the policy, although his interest shall have terminated before the death of the assured;"—framed as if to meet the very risk to which persons in the position of the plaintiff were undoubtedly liable so long as Godsall v. Boldero remained law. The plaintiff seems to have stated his object fairly, and without any reserve: he was at first inclined to effect an assurance for the whole life of his son, but, at the suggestion of the secretary, limited his proposals to a policy for two years—a period a few months beyond the son's thirtieth birth-day, and sufficient to cover any uncertainty as to the actual day of his birth. The policy, which was for 2999*l.*, was granted on the 9th April, 1850, for two years. The son completed his thirtieth year on the 16th January, 1852, fulfilling the contingency imposed by the legacy, and, singularly enough, died six days afterwards, on the 22nd January. The 3000*l.* legacy was received by the father; and in due time, after the 9th April, 1852, he applied to the company for payment of the 2999*l.* due upon the policy. To his no small surprise, however, he is informed that the "indisputable and indefeasible" document in his hand is disputed, and that payment will not be made, as he has received that sum against the possible loss of which the policy was intended to secure him. The company, in fact, entrenching themselves upon Godsall v. Boldero, tell the plaintiff that their contract with him is merely one of indemnity, and that if their rules are to be construed according to his view they would be rendered illegal. This somewhat tardy awakening to penitence in the company for their previous disregard, if not express repudiation, of the supreme authority of the Court of King's Bench is met by a suit in equity on the part of the plaintiff. We need not pause to explain the grounds of his proceeding in equity rather than by action at common law; it is sufficient to say they were considered adequate by Sir W. P. Wood, V.C., who made a decree in his favour. That learned judge, in the course of his very able judgment, expressed his entire concurrence with the principles laid down by Parke, B., in the Exchequer Chamber. After advert- ing to the mistaken analogy to marine and fire assurance set up in Godsall v. Boldero with respect to life policies, his Honor made the following observations:—"The policy never refers to the cause or reason for effecting the assurance, the annual premiums being calculated by the company upon the value which they think ought to be paid in order to make the postponed payment, without reference to any other circumstance, whether of one event or of another event: that is a matter of entire indifference to the company—it is no part of their contract; they have founded their calculation upon the probable duration of human life, and they get paid the full value of that calculation. On what principle, then, can it afterwards be said, that because somebody else is good enough to satisfy the object which the party had in effecting the assurance, they should be released from the contract?" And in reference to stat. 14 Geo. 3, c. 48, he observed further, that he could not fairly say that the contract was either within the words or the spirit of the enactment: nothing like a fraud upon the statute had been attempted by the plaintiff, whose conduct shewed perfect bona fides throughout the transaction: and further, the contract, and the contract alone, as between the parties, must be looked to: it was not void in reference to public policy, nor ought the amount to be received to be cut down by the operation of the statute, by reason of the event upon which the legacy became payable happening some short time before the termination of the policy.

Independently of the natural satisfaction felt at the defeat of what we cannot but consider a most unjust attempt on the part of the "Indisputable" office to repudiate their own deliberate contract and the express terms of their prospectus, the judgment of Sir W. P. Wood, V.C., will, we are convinced, meet with the unanimous approbation of the Profession, as a clear and distinct statement of the law as now settled, and giving the coup de grace, if such were needed, to that decision of Godsall v. Boldero which has so long burthened our text-books, and cast a slur upon the commercial policy of England, as expounded by our judges. Further comment upon the case would be unnecessary, as we have so recently discussed the subject in our remarks upon Dalby v. The India and London Life Assurance Company. We will merely add, that it is matter of congratulation that both sides of Westminster Hall have boldly construed the act of Geo. 3 in an enlarged and liberal spirit, and no longer rendered necessary the interference of the Legislature for the purpose of amending that statute, in accordance with the ordinary practice of assurance offices and the present demands of society.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A curious question came before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Bishop v. Wildbore, (Feb. 7), which was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, in having refused the appellant, Mrs. Bishop, to conduct a testamentary suit in formâ pauperis. The husband, a solicitor's clerk, was an uncertificated bankrupt, and from his salary could only procure the necessaries of life: the wife was entitled to an annuity under a will, but there was no prospect of its early payment. Under these circumstances the judgment below was reversed, the Court distinguishing the case from others that were cited, on the ground that the husband was an uncertificated bankrupt.

The payment of the deposit by an allottee of shares upon the day specified for payment in the letter of allotment is a condition precedent to his right to sue for non-delivery of the shares. (Lucas v. The Port Tenant Patent Fuel Company, Feb. 7, Exch., Nisi Prius, per Pollock, C. B., after consulting the other judges of the Exchequer).

Acts of cruelty on the part of a husband had been condoned; he afterwards maliciously deserted his wife: it was held by Sir John Dodson that the acts of cruelty were not thereby revived, so as to afford a ground for separation a mensâ et thoro, upon the prayer of the wife. (Hart v. Hart, Arches Court, Feb. 7). The learned judge stated, that by the law of several of the United States, malicious desertion in itself affords a ground for divorce, referring, as his authority, to Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, which he described as a valuable book.

The Insolvent Court orders the release of insolvents who have been committed by a county court judge while they are in possession of the protection of the Insolvent Court, but refuses to do so when the committal takes place after they have been discharged, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. (Re Woraker, Feb. 7, per Mr. Commissioner Murphy).

In Underwood v. Wing, the Lord Chancellor, assisted by two common-law judges, has held (Feb. 5) that where persons perish by a common calamity, there is no legal presumption of survivorship. Mr. and Mrs. Underwood were swept off together from the deck of The Dalhousie by a large wave, and they were never seen again. The claimant's title was dependent upon one having survived the other. The onus of proof lying upon him, and there being nothing from which the Court could infer survivorship, judgment was given against him. Upon this interesting question we refer our readers to the observations made by Mr. Best in his "Principles of Evidence," pp. 479—481, 2nd ed., where it will be seen that the views suggested by him have been fully confirmed in the above case.

The following appointments have been made during the past week:—Thomas Mackenzie, her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Scotland, to be one of the Lords of Session in Scotland, in the room of Patrick Robertson, deceased; Valentine Fleming, to be Chief Justice of Van Diemen's Land; Sydney Smith Bell, to be Puisne Judge, and John Watts Ebdon, second Puisne Judge of the Cape of Good Hope; and Arthur Bigge, to be a Police Magistrate and Justice of the Peace for the borough of Brighton.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervia, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—George Lockett Robinson, of Longton, Staffordshire, in and for the county of Stafford; John Houchen the younger, of Thetford, Norfolk, in and for the county of Norfolk.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 17, 1855.

*THE granting of an injunction to restrain by the "writ remedial" any illegal or unjust exercise of either an assumed right, or one which, although legal in itself, it was contrary to the principles of equity to pursue at law, was, from the earliest period of our legal history, exercised only by the Courts of equity, and the writ issued in the name of the Lord Chancellor as Keeper of the King's Conscience, and on his Sovereign's behalf, enjoining a subject to abstain from enforcing any inequitable right, or doing any wrongful act.

This writ became in time greatly modified, both in form and substance, and for a very considerable period has practically been granted by the Lord Chancellor and the other judges in equity, not only in those extreme cases in which alone it was formerly obtained, but in all cases where, as between subject and subject, the right of the party applying for relief in equity was sufficiently clear; and the practice of granting interim injunctions until the final decision of the cause thence arose—a practice of great advantage to the suitors, as it often enabled parties to discuss the real merits of a cause on an interlocutory application for an injunction, without incurring the great expense which the bringing of a cause to a hearing might entail. In practice, in equity, injunction causes rarely proceeded beyond this interlocutory stage, each party acquiescing in the judgment of the Court, and all further litigation was avoided. The fusion of law and equity, which seems, with reason, to have lately become a favourite theory both of legislators and of the Profession, has led, in all the recent acts of Parliament for the amendment of the law, to the introduction of various provisions to promote this end. By the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 79 et seq., power is given to the superior Courts of common law to grant a writ of injunction at any stage of a cause, in the mode prescribed by the act; and the 82nd section enacts, that "it shall be lawful for the plaintiff at any time after the commencement of the action, and whether before or after judgment, to apply ex parte to the court or a judge for a writ of injunction to restrain the defendant in such action from the repetition or continuance of the wrongful act or breach of contract complained of, or the committal of any breach of contract, or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract, or relating to the same property or right; and such writ may be granted or denied by the court or judge upon such terms, as to the duration of the writ, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as to such court or judge shall seem reasonable and just; and in case of disobedience such writ may be enforced by attachment by the court, or, when such court shall not be sitting, by a judge."

By the 83rd section a defendant may plead, "for an equitable defence," such facts as would constitute a ground for relief in equity against a judgment at law.

These sections, if enforced in a liberal and reforming spirit by the Courts of common law, promise real benefit to litigants; but for this purpose equitable defences should be allowed, and the writ of injunction ought to be at least as freely granted by the Courts of law as by the equity judges, otherwise they will soon come to be a dead letter; and as the act in no way restricts or abridges the present jurisdiction of the Courts of equity to grant injunctions, application will always be made to those Courts for them. An impression seems to prevail among the judges, that to enable the common-law Courts to allow an equitable defence or to grant an injunction under these sections, a case should be made out by the applicant sufficient to enable him in a court of equity to obtain an unconditional perpetual injunction. Now, according to the present practice of Courts of equity, no interlocutory injunction is granted except upon terms—the terms usually being, that the party obtaining the injunction undertakes to abide by any assessment of damages the Court may think fit to award his opponent in the event of the injunction being finally dissolved.

The Courts of law do not seem hitherto to have adopted or appreciated the value of such a rule, and the result sometimes is, that a party applying to a Court of law, without success, for an injunction, which upon the same grounds which he lays before the Court of law he would obtain in a court of equity, may be met afterwards in equity by the grave objection which is best stated in the language of the Bench in the case of Megoe v. Megoe, (2 Coop. t. Cottenham, 213). Sir J. Leach there says—"Of late years the Courts of common law have entertained applications upon principles the operation of which was formerly supposed to be confined to Courts of equity. It is true that this enlargement of the jurisdiction of the other Courts of Westminster Hall does not prevent this Court from exercising that jurisdiction which it has always possessed. But when a party, not thinking fit to come here in the first instance, goes into a court of common law, relying upon the equitable principles recently introduced there, and having failed, at last tries the experiment of a bill in Chancery, I am of opinion that I ought not to interfere. I make no doubt that a similar course would be adopted in a court of common law. I make no doubt that an application to its equitable jurisdiction would meet with little encouragement if it were known that this Court had not regarded the party as entitled to relief."

If this principle, which has been generally acknowledged and followed in recent cases, be still enforced, it is of the highest importance that suitors should not be driven from one court to another for relief, on the ground that it may be more easily obtained in equity than at law. The equitable title to an injunction should be the same on each side of Westminster Hall; and we may refer to an able little treatise on equitable defences by Mr. J. D. Mayne, as containing the material points on which the principles of equity are now applicable to actions at common law.

To fully carry out the beneficial sections of this statute, it is essential that Courts of law should follow the present practice of the Courts of equity on interlocutory applications for injunctions, and grant at least interim injunctions during the progress of a cause, upon the terms usually imposed, and thus obviate the necessity of a still continued severance of jurisdiction, and a resort to the Court of Chancery for a relief which it was intended should be obtained in a far simpler and cheaper mode at law.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A trader may be made a bankrupt upon a judgment debt from which he has been discharged in the Insolvent Court, although the having been taken in execution on such judgment led him to petition the Insolvent Court. The presentation of the petition may be treated as the act of bankruptcy. The Court referred to the judgment of Holroyd, J., in Jellis v. Mountford, (4 B. & Al. 264), and said that the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, by one section, put an end to the right of creditors to sue, but it also provided that the insolvent might be made bankrupt on the petition of such creditors as appeared. (Watson v. Humphrey and Another, Exch., Feb. 9).

Towards the end of the Sittings for Middlesex after Term two Courts sat for the Queen's Bench and two for the Exchequer, under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 2, and thereby the long lists of cases in those courts were completely exhausted.

The Courts have on several recent occasions successfully exercised the power of adjournment which they possess under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 19.

Chitty's Collection of Statutes, with Notes thereon; intended as a Circuit and Court Companion. The Second Edition, containing all the Statutes of practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 4 vols.

[Sweet, and Stevens & Norton, 1854.]

THIS important work is now completed, and four volumes of tolerable size comprehend all our statutes of practical utility. This of itself is a great advantage to all who are engaged in the administration of justice; but the value of the work is considerably enhanced by careful annotations to the various sections, whereby their effect and operation, as judicially determined, are placed side by side with the enactments themselves.

On a former occasion* we reviewed the first and second volumes of this edition at some length, and we shall therefore now confine our observations to the succeeding volumes. The learned editors have worthily fulfilled, as they had begun, their task. They have received, as they must have needed, encouragement during the progress of their work; for, as each volume issued from the press, not only did it meet with the marked approbation of the Profession at large, but also of the learned judges. We believe it is now adopted as a circuit companion, to which reference is more frequently and usefully made than to any other book.

In the third and fourth volumes will be found the statutes upon the following (among many other) subjects:—Limitation of Actions; Parliament; Patents; Pleading; Practice; Poor; Railways; Registration; Sessions; Shipping; Stamps; and Wills. There is also a copious analytical index to the whole work. The printing of the titles "Poor" and "Sessions" is so arranged that they may be detached and bound up separately for use at sessions: the same plan, it will be remembered, was adopted with reference to "Criminal Law," in the second volume. We are glad to learn that the editors intend to issue annually a supplementary collection of statutes of practical utility of the preceding session, with notes upon the same basis as the larger work. One of these has already appeared, containing the statutes of the last session; inter alia, the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, the Merchant Shipping Consolidation Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, the Bills of Sale Registration Act, the Friendly Societies Acts, and the one for abolishing the laws against usury.

In our former review we took occasion to point out some of the evils which arise from the multiplicity of statutes, and the careless manner in which they are framed. We have since that time met with a speech of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in the House of Lords, containing matter so pertinent to the subject, that we are tempted to extract portions of it on the present occasion†.

"We have it from the highest authority," said his Lordship, "that in the multitude of counsellors there 'is safety; but we in this nation may from experience say, that in the multitude of legislators there is confusion; for our statute-books are increased to such an enormous size that they confound every man who is obliged to look into them; and this is plainly owing to a great change which has by degrees crept into our constitution. In old times almost all the laws which were designed to be public acts, and to continue as the standing laws of this kingdom, were first moved for, drawn up, and passed in this House, where we have the learned judges always attending, and ready to give us their advice and assistance. From their knowledge and experience, they must be allowed to be best able to tell whether any grievance complained of proceeds from a non-execution of the laws in being, and whether it be of such a nature as may be redressed by a new law. In the former case a new law must be always unnecessary, and in the latter it must be ridiculous; and when by the opinion and advice of the judges we find that neither of these is the case, we have their assistance, whereby we are enabled to draw up a new law in such a manner as to render it effectual and easy to be understood. This is the true reason why in former times we had but very few laws passed in Parliament, and very seldom, if ever, a posterior law for explaining and amending a former.

"By this new method of law-making," continued his Lordship, "the business of the two Houses seems to be so much altered, that I really think the writs of summons ought to be altered; those for the other House ought now to be 'ad consulendum,' and those to the members of this 'ad consentiendum.' But this is far from being the only inconvenience: the other House, by their being so numerous, and by their being destitute of the advice and assistance of the judges, are too apt to pass laws which are either unnecessary or ridiculous, and almost every law they pass stands in need of some new law for explaining and amending it; and we in this House, either through complaisance or through want of time, are but too apt to give our consent, often without any amendment. By this means it is that our statute-books have of late years increased to such an enormous size, that no lawyer, not even one of the longest and most extensive practice, can pretend to be master of all the statutes that relate to any one case that comes before him; and this evil goes on increasing so much every year, that it is high time for this House to begin to put a stop to it, by resolving not to pass any bill for introducing a new and standing law that comes from the other House, unless it comes up so early in the session as to leave us sufficient time to take the advice and assistance of the judges upon it, and to consider every clause of it maturely*; and in every such case we ought to consider whether a new law be necessary for the purpose intended; for no new law ought ever to be made unless it appears to be absolutely necessary, as a multitude of useless laws is one of the greatest plagues a people can be exposed to. In the next place, we ought to consider whether the inconvenience or grievance intended to be removed be of such a nature as to admit of being cured by any human law; for if it be not, we render ourselves ridiculous by the attempt. In the third place, we ought to consider whether, by endeavouring to remove the grievance or misfortune complained of, we may probably introduce a much greater; and in the fourth place, we ought to examine very strictly whether the law be conceived in such terms as may be effectual for the end intended, and the several clauses so clearly expressed as can admit of no doubt."

* Such a resolution was passed in the House of Lords in the session of 1855.

THE LAW OF BLOCKADE.

THE following is an extract from Dr. Waddilove's paper read before the Statistical Society on the 15th ult. It will be found to contain an interesting review of the progress of international law upon the subject of blockade:—

"The object of the present paper is to point out the great change that has taken place in an important principle of our declared international law, as manifested by the recent Orders of her Majesty in Council, and to shew, that, notwithstanding their important advance towards amelioration, they still justify a course of action which, causing serious inconvenience to the passive and inoffensive neutral, is productive of but doubtful injury to our enemy, while it inflicts certain loss on ourselves, and hence to deduce a hope that the same spirit which has so manifestly characterised the conduct of Great Britain will still further develop itself, and that this country will eventually, in conjunction with the United States of America and the several powers of Europe, unanimously and unequivocally declare that the property of private individuals is as sacred on the ocean as it is on land.

"In tracing the history of this subject, I have been led to select the treaty of Utrecht as my first landmark; because by the terms of that treaty were first distinctly laid down, acknowledged, and promulgated the rights of maritime neutral nations, and because on the terms of that treaty were based the several subsequent commercial relations established between the chief maritime nations of Europe, and which remained uncontroverted until the wars of the French revolution.

"The words in point of that treaty are, (Art. 17)—'And it is now stipulated concerning ships and goods, that free ships shall also give a freedom to goods, and that everything shall be deemed to be free and exempt which shall be found on board belonging to the subjects of either of the confederates, although the whole lading, or any part thereof, should appertain to the enemies of either of their Majesties, contraband of war being always excepted.'

"Here we have the principle, that free ships make free goods, distinctly enunciated. It must, however, be borne in mind, that this was but the stipulation of a treaty—a sort of special compact to exempt the parties to it from the application of the ordinary rule of international law, viz. 'that the property of an enemy on board a neutral ship is good and lawful prize'—a maxim adopted by our own legal tribunals, as also by those of the United States of America, notwithstanding that country, from the very dawn of her existence as a nation, adhered to the opposite doctrine in her several commercial treaties.

"When this treaty of Utrecht was put an end to by the war of 1756, England abandoned its provisions, and thus fell back upon the rule of general international law, and hesitated not to enforce, in the most energetic and determined manner, her obnoxious belligerent rights; hence resulted the convention formed against her known as the armed neutrality of 1780. Notwithstanding, however, that formidable combination, composed of the United States of America, as well as the maritime powers of Europe, England, trusting to her naval superiority, and conceiving that to permit traffic in her enemy's merchandise would be injurious to her interests, resolved to seize, under the sanction of maritime international law, (as interpreted by her jurists and laid down by her judicial tribunals), the property of her enemy when on the ocean, wherever it could be found, whether in the vessel of friend or foe; and thus single-handed she braved the storm of aggression with which she was assailed.

"The peace of 1783 for a time laid the question at rest, until the war with France, consequent on the French revolution which broke out in 1793, again revived all the hostile feeling between that country and Great Britain. The right of seizing the enemy's property on board neutral vessels was again insisted on, and declared to be in accordance with the soundest principles of international law; and the navy of Great Britain, much increased in number since the last war, aided by numerous privateers, (a kind of legalised pirate, now happily unknown), was actively employed in overhauling neutral vessels for the search of enemy's property.

"The northern nations of Europe, with Russia at their head, again combined for the purpose of resisting this inroad on neutral rights in the month of December, 1800. A treaty renewing the confederacy for an armed neutrality was concluded between Russia and Sweden, to which Denmark and Prussia quickly gave their adherence. England, however, undeterred, still repudiated the maxim, 'that free ships make free goods.'

"There has always been an endeavour on the part of a country to foster and protect the commerce of its colonies. In her desire to accomplish this, France had, during her wars with England, invited other nations to trade with the French possessions in the West Indies, offering thereby to neutrals a privilege during war from which they were sedulously excluded during peace. The Prize Courts of this country had condemned that practice as far back as the year 1756, by a declaration of the principle, 'that a neutral has no right to deliver a belligerent from the pressure of his enemies' hostilities by trading with his colonies in time of war in a way that was prohibited in time of peace.' France, however, persisted in her course of action; and in the war of 1793 she again openly invited neutrals to trade with her colonies, although as an integral part of the French territory they were to England hostile ground. England, therefore, immediately issued instructions for the seizure of all vessels bringing goods from or carrying supplies to the colonies of her enemies.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 24, 1855.

THE great and unequivocal success which has attended on the numerous and important reforms effected within the last twenty years in our legal system has encouraged not only their authors, but others ambitious of treading in their footsteps, and participating the triumphs they have achieved and the fame they have acquired, to continue their labours, to redouble their efforts, and to attempt still further and more important changes and improvements. That these changes and improvements are required none can deny. Much, indeed, has been effected; but much remains to be done. Not a little that was cumbrous and unnecessary has been swept away; many glaring abuses have been removed, and many defects been remedied; but abuses and defects yet exist, which demand the unsparing hand of the reformer.

Among these may be noticed the law relating to the process for the recovery of debts secured by bills of exchange and promissory notes. These instruments, so important and indispensable to the successful conduct of the transactions of the commercial world, have been much diminished in their utility by the difficulties thrown in the way of their enforcement. According to the existing law, as our readers are well aware, the holder of a dishonoured bill, to which there is and can be no defence, must bring an action, and proceed to judgment, before he can obtain the payment of the amount for which it was given. By these means great delay is occasioned, and considerable expense incurred; and after this delay and expense the creditor frequently finds that the fund to which he has looked for the liquidation of his demand has disappeared, and the only security left to him is the person of a bankrupt debtor.

To remedy this evil two measures have been recently introduced to the attention of the Legislature by Lord Brougham and Mr. Keating.

The principal provisions of the scheme proposed by Lord Brougham are, that bills and promissory notes shall be protested in the ordinary form; that when protested, they shall be registered, by an officer appointed for that purpose, in each of the superior courts; that after such registry an order may be obtained against all the parties for the payment of the same within six days after the service of the order; and that on the expiration of the six days, execution shall issue against the respective parties. Before execution, however, any of the persons served may, upon making an affidavit disclosing a legal defence, have the execution stayed and an issue raised for trial. He must, however, except in certain cases, furnish security for the payment of the principal debt and costs, or pay into court a sum sufficiently large to cover the same.

According to the plan suggested by Mr. Keating, all actions upon bills or promissory notes are to be brought by writ of summons, in the special form given in the act. In the event of the parties not appearing to the writ, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, on an affidavit of the service of such writ, to sign judgment and proceed to execution. The defendant, where he is within the jurisdiction of the Court, may, within eight days after the service of such order, apply to a judge of any of the courts for permission to appear to the writ, and he shall, on disclosing a valid defence, be allowed to appear and defend the action.

Where the parties are not resident within the jurisdiction of the Courts, a different form of writ is given, and the period allowed for entering an appearance is to be regulated by the distance from England of the locality in which the party happens at the time to be resident. In all cases the actions must be commenced within three months after the instruments shall have become due; otherwise the parties are to be left to their ordinary remedies.

On the relative merits of these plans it is neither our wish, nor our intention, to pronounce a judgment. Each possesses advantages peculiar to itself. That of Lord Brougham has a claim to support from the fact that it is not a mere untried scheme, or a piece of experimental legislation, but that it is an attempt to extend to this country a system long established in a neighbouring kingdom, and which, in the opinion of all best fitted to judge, has produced beneficial results. That of the honourable and learned member for Reading has, on the other hand, the advantage of not introducing any new machinery, and of being framed in a spirit more in accordance with the existing system of English judicature.

For this reason we should be inclined to decide in favour of the latter scheme. We should give it also the preference for another reason, viz. that it does not require the previous condition of giving security for the debt, or payment of the amount into court. Many cases must frequently occur where persons, possessed of a decisive defence to a claim on a bill or note, may not be in a position to provide the necessary sum to be paid into court, or may not be able to obtain, or willing to ask, the assistance of a friend as a security, and may in consequence be exposed to the infliction of grievous injustice. But instead of entering further into the discussion of this matter, we would rather direct our attention to the objections raised to the necessity of a change, and to the results likely to follow from the adoption of the remedies proposed.

It has been said that the present system has been sanctioned by long and uninterrupted usage; that under its operation commerce has been fostered and extended; that with few exceptions it has been found to work efficiently; and that consequently the substitution for it of any novel and more stringent remedy is unnecessary, and would be impolitic.

It has been further urged, that the introduction of a summary mode of procedure would operate with great severity on indorsers, who, without knowing that the bill had been dishonoured, and without having time allowed to ascertain the grounds on which an acceptor has refused payment, might in the space of a few days be compelled to pay the amount, or be exposed to the danger of their property being seized and sacrificed.

A great injustice also, it is said, might be done to the acceptors themselves, who might have a good defence, but might not at the time be able fully to substantiate it.

Further, it is alleged that its tendency would be to check the system of credit which has long prevailed in the commercial world, and on which its prosperity mainly depends, and to interfere with legitimate speculation.

And, lastly, it is asserted that an instrument would be placed in the hands of an exacting creditor which might frequently be employed most injuriously, and that the consequence would, in many cases, be to effect the ruin of the poor trader.

These objections, adduced by persons possessed of great commercial experience, and enjoying numerous and rare opportunities of forming a correct judgment, are unquestionably entitled to grave attention, and will be carefully considered by the members of the Legislature when the measures submitted to them come to be discussed. We think, however, that a little reflection will shew that they are rather specious than sound; that they are dictated by fears which are not likely to be realised; and that the weight of reasoning, experience, and authority is decidedly on the side of the proposed alterations.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are contracts, by which the parties to them agree, that at the arrival of a fixed period the sums therein named shall be paid to the holders. When that period arrives a debt has accrued, and each of the parties is bound to provide for its liquidation. Should he omit to do so, he is guilty of a breach of duty, for the consequences of which he is liable. To screen him, on the one hand, from these consequences is what no legislator should attempt; while, on the other, every effort should be made to compel him to meet the liabilities he has undertaken. This is what Lord Brougham's and Mr. Keating's bills propose to effect, and for this reason they are entitled to support.

Nor can any injustice be done thereby to the indorsers; every person who attaches his name to a bill, and for a consideration puts it into circulation, must be aware that he thereby guarantees its payment; and he surely cannot complain if, as soon as the acceptor has omitted to take it up, he is called upon to provide for its immediate settlement.

By the acceptors themselves no injury will be sustained: while a speedy redress is afforded to a creditor against a dishonest debtor, ample opportunities of defence are given to those against whom an unjust claim may be made. The course laid open to them is clear. They have only to apply to a judge, and they would at once be permitted to appear and resist the demand.

Want of space compels us to defer until our next number a few further observations which we have to make on this subject.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. J. J. Lonsdale, secretary to the Criminal Law Commissioners, to the vacant county court judgeship of Leicestershire.

Mr. J. Mellor, Q. C., succeeds Mr. Hildyard as recorder of Leicester.

Lord Campbell, C. J., (Feb. 15, Queen's Bench), refused to seal a bill of exceptions because they were not tendered to him until after the verdict had been recorded.

Lord St. Leonards' bill for the protection of purchasers against judgment creditors is passing through the House of Lords.

The public prosecutor's bill, and the bill for facilitating remedies on bills of exchange, are again before the House of Commons.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 3, 1855.

SINCE our last number, in which we called attention to the bills before Parliament for facilitating remedies upon bills of exchange and promissory notes, a meeting of bankers, merchants, and lawyers, convened specially for the discussion of this subject, has been held at Birmingham. The main objections urged upon this occasion to the legislative measures alluded to were, that a peculiar character would be given to negotiable instruments, by which the holders would be placed in a more favourable position than other creditors; that they would resemble cognovits or warrants of attorney, rather than the old mercantile letter; that circulation of good bills would be restricted, and the only parties benefited would be the bill-discounters; that of the immense number of bills sent out, very few comparatively were dishonoured; and that the large commercial towns were not desirous of any change.

The following paragraphs contain the leading arguments used by the objectors in their own language, and are inserted in the petition which they have presented to Parliament:—

"That by the provisions of this bill, (Mr. Keating's bill), an overdue bill of exchange or promissory note will have all the force and effect of a secret security available in eight days against the property and person of a trader, which, besides giving an undue advantage to the creditor whose bill or note happens to be first dishonoured, will make a trader, by a collusive arrangement with a friendly or family creditor, to procure his property to be swept away, and a fraudulent preference to be obtained over all his other creditors.

"That the provisions of the said bill, by which indorsers as well as acceptors and drawers of bills and notes are rendered indiscriminately liable to have a judgment recorded against them, and their property or persons seized in execution in eight days after dishonour of a bill or note which they were not primarily liable to pay, are calculated to create great distrust and alarm amongst the commercial classes of this country, and seriously to interfere and diminish the use of bills of exchange and promissory notes as a medium of circulation, and to create great confusion and inconvenience in the negotiation of foreign bills of exchange, which are remitted to this country in payment in the ordinary course of business.

"That such an enactment will be directly opposite to the policy of the law, unless further provisions are introduced, by which proceedings against the trader on a dishonoured bill or note shall be made to result in an equal distribution of his property amongst all the creditors, and not on the preference of one creditor over another; and your petitioners submit that if the said bill is passed into a law in its present form, greater facilities for the perpetration of fraud will be created than at present exist, and greater evils arise than any which are now felt by reason of frivolous or vexatious defences to actions on bills of exchange or promissory notes under the existing law.

"That whilst the power of defending an action to gain time may be sometimes frivolously and vexatiously used, it is more frequently adopted by traders acting under advice for the benefit of the general body of their creditors, and as a means of obtaining time and opportunity to look more narrowly into the state of their affairs, and to enable them to call their creditors together, with a view to some arrangement by which the creditor suing may not obtain a preference over all others; and your petitioners contend that the provisions of the existing law in this respect, which the proposed bill is intended to change, have not been required to be altered, nor have the new remedies which it is sought to substitute been called for, by any of the influential classes of commercial men in this country."

Without further comment of our own, we now leave the question, with the arguments pro and con, for the consideration of our readers.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Criminal Justice Bill, giving magistrates in petty sessions power to convict in all cases of petty larceny where the value of the article stolen does not exceed 10s. in value, and in such cases to inflict a punishment not exceeding one year's imprisonment, has been read a second time in the House of Lords. The prisoner may be tried by a jury, if he prefers it. Prisoners pleading guilty to charges of larceny, where the value exceeds 10s., may be sentenced by the magistrates at once to imprisonment for any term not exceeding one year.

The Public Prosecutors Bill (introduced by Mr. J. G. Phillimore and Mr. Watson) empowers the Queen to divide the circuits of the judges of assize into districts, and the Lord Chancellor to appoint for each of such districts one or more public prosecutors, being barristers of not less than ten years' standing; the salaries of these officers are to be fixed by the Lords of the Treasury. Before a criminal trial, the public prosecutor's duty will be somewhat analogous to that of a grand jury—that is, he will examine the depositions, and signify his opinion whether the evidence is sufficient to justify the prisoner's committal for trial or not. At the trial, the duty of the public prosecutor will be to conduct the prosecution on the part of the Crown. Deputy public prosecutors may be appointed, in case of need, by the clerk of assize. Such officers are to be barristers of three years' standing. Provision is also made for the appointment of attorneys for the prosecution, and district agents, whose duty it will be to get up evidence for the public prosecution. Persons, however, may present bills of indictment before the grand jury as before, at their own cost.

On the trial of Thomas Munroe at Carlisle, on the 23rd February, for the murder of Isaac Turner, Dr. Alfred Taylor was examined as to spots of blood found on the prisoner's clothes, and stated that by the aid of the microscope he separated the particles of blood, measured them, and found that the globules had the large size peculiar to human blood. They were larger in human beings than in any other animals of the same class—mammalia. They were about six times the size of the particles of blood from a cow. Ammonia enabled him to ascertain it to be blood: when ammonia was added to blood, it underwent no change in colour; all other red colours were converted by ammonia into green. The small globules in a human being were in diameter 3500 to an inch; in a sheep 5600; in a cow 4200; in a pig 3900 or 4000. In recent blood, if coagulated, the spots were shining and glossy, like varnish; when placed in distilled water they speedily dissolved. Neither age nor sex made any difference in the appearance of the blood, but disease would make a difference.

The Law Amendment Society met on Saturday, the 24th February. Lord Brougham was in the chair, and the Solicitor-General moved a resolution to the effect that the friends of law reform should at the present time direct their special attention to the following measures:—

1. The consolidation of the law.
2. An amendment of the Common-law Procedure Act of last session, so as more effectually to secure the attainment of its objects.
3. Amendment of the law of bankruptcy.
4. Alteration in the law of partnership, so as to afford greater facilities for the promotion of partnerships with limited liability.
5. Amendment of the laws relating to women, including the law of divorce.
6. The appointment of a public prosecutor.
7. The more speedy trial of offenders, (especially when charged with petty offences), and a general improvement in the administration of the criminal law.
8. The amendment of the act of last session relating to juvenile reformatories.

In the second Court of Exchequer, (Feb. 24), Martin, B., and the special jurors who were in attendance, expressed their opinion that the old system of trying causes by special juries was much more convenient than the new one requiring a separate special jury for each separate cause.

In Re Manning, (Feb. 24, Bankr., before Mr. Commissioner Goulburn), upon an application, under the 125th section of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, for an order for the sale of certain goods and chattels, which it was alleged were "in the possession, order, or disposition" of a bankrupt, at the time he became bankrupt, with the consent of the true owner, "and whereof he was reputed owner," but of which he had previously given a bill of sale to one of his creditors, the learned commissioner held, that the fact of the bill of sale having been duly filed under the recent act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36) did not affect the "reputed ownership" contemplated by the 125th section; the registration or filing of a bill of sale under the act not giving notoriety to the transfer of the property comprised in it sufficient to destroy the "reputed ownership." By consent of the parties, the commissioner's decision was to be final, subject only to appeal to the Lords Justices. In the absence of such consent the application is ex parte, (see Ex parte Barlow, 2 De G., Mac., & G. 921), and the order is granted as a matter of course.

MORTGAGE—ACKNOWLEDGMENT WITHIN STAT. 3 & 4 WILL. 4, c. 27, s. 28.

THE important practical consequences attendant on the recent decision in Stansfeld v. Hobson, (16 Bear. 236; 3 De G., Mac., & G. 620), and the imperfect consideration the case appears to have received, justify some remarks respecting it.

Stansfeld v. Hobson was a suit to redeem, under the following circumstances:—A leasehold estate was assigned to the defendant by way of mortgage. In 1825, the interest being in arrear, the defendant entered into possession, and continued in possession down to 1852, when the claim was filed. In 1850, in reply to an application from the plaintiff's solicitor, he wrote a letter, in which he said, "I do not see the use of a meeting, either here or at Manchester, unless some party is ready with the money to pay me off." This letter, the plaintiff contended, brought the case within the exception in the 28th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. The Master of the Rolls so determined, and the Lords Justices, on appeal, affirmed the decision.

There were two questions—one, whether the letter was a sufficient acknowledgment in point of form, which it is unnecessary to notice further; the other, whether the acknowledgment, if good in form, was not too late.

In the Court of Appeal the chief, and in the court below the only, contention appears to have been on the point of form; no notice of the other point is taken in the argument or judgment at the Rolls, or in the judgment in the court above.

On the appeal, it was contended for the defendant, that the acknowledgment ought to have been given within twenty years after the mortgagee obtained possession; that no other effect could be given to the expression "in the meantime" in the 28th section of the statute. The Lords Justices expressed no opinion on the point; but as judgment was for the plaintiff, they must have thought "meantime" comprises any interval between the taking possession and the commencement of the suit, if an acknowledgment be given, and the suit commenced within twenty years after such acknowledgment; so that although a mortgagee may be in adverse possession for twenty or thirty years, or upwards, no matter how long, yet, if he acknowledges the mortgagor's title, the latter has a further period of twenty years to make his claim.

The principle upon which all the enactments of the statute are grounded is, that an adverse possession for twenty years ought to confer an indefeasible title; and therefore one would have expected to find the Courts astute to construe the act so as to carry out that principle, wherever the language permitted such a construction. Was it prevented here? Certainly not. What is the language of the statute? No suit for redemption is to be brought "but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained possession, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor, or of his right of redemption, shall have been given;" and in such case "no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments, was made;" the obvious meaning of which is, that the suit must be brought within twenty years, reckoning forward from the taking possession where there is no acknowledgment, and from the giving the acknowledgment where there is. If, where there is an acknowledgment, the suit is to be commenced within twenty years from the giving the acknowledgment, pari ratione the Legislature must have intended that the suit should be commenced within twenty years from the time of taking possession where there is no intermediate acknowledgment.

It was intended to fix some limit to the time for redeeming; but if "meantime" means twenty years, reckoning from the giving the acknowledgment, without regard to the time of taking possession, the mortgage title will be kept alive for an indefinite time, since it is impossible to predicate when the last acknowledgment may not be given. According to the decision in Stansfeld v. Hobson, the commencement of the suit is the point to reckon from, and we are to reckon backward; and if within twenty years so reckoned we find the entering into possession, or an acknowledgment, then the suit is in time.

But this construction of the 28th section is not only unwarranted by its language, and opposed to the spirit of the act, but it ignores and goes far to repeal the 34th section altogether. Although that section plays an important part in the general construction of the act, no reference was made to it; and the omission renders the decision the more unsatisfactory. The 34th section declares, that at the determination of the period limited for bringing any suit, the right and title of the claimant shall be "extinguished." Now, what is the period at the determination of which the right is to be extinguished, where there is no acknowledgment, if it be not twenty years from the entering into possession? If a mortgagee is in possession twenty years, and during that time makes no acknowledgment, is not the mortgagor's title under this section extinguished the moment the twenty years are completed, and that, too, entirely and for ever? There is no other period to which the extinguishment can be referred. There "meantime" must refer to the twenty years' possession. Then, at the expiration of the twenty years, is there any difference between the case put and one where there is a subsequent acknowledgment?

The decision converts "extinguished" into "dormant:" it treats the right to redeem as being in full vigour just twenty years, and then falling into a dormant state, ready to start into life again for another twenty years whenever its existence is acknowledged. How long that dormant state may continue is left uncertain. Does it depend on the continued ownership of the mortgagee? Is it affected by his dealings with the property? Does it terminate with his life? At the end of the twenty years' possession, is the estate of the mortgagee in equity real or personal? As, according to Stansfeld v. Hobson, the mortgagee may at any time during his life acknowledge with effect his mortgage title, it would seem to follow, that to the time of his death he has nothing more, and that his interest should pass to his personal representative. That, however, it would be difficult to reconcile with well-known rules of equity. If a judgment be entered up against the mortgagee, what lien has the creditor after the twenty years? May it be defeated by the debtors acknowledging the title of the mortgagor? If the mortgagee makes a lease, to what extent will it be valid? And if he sells and conveys as absolute owner, will the acknowledgment of his grantee have the same effect as his own?

Other cases might be suggested, but the above are sufficient to shew the confusion this decision, if acted on, will create. S. S. W.

THE RELIGION OF FOUNDLINGS.

THE guardians of the North Dublin Union have been placed in a position of some difficulty by certain opinions delivered by the respective law officers of the Crown, Mr. Attorney-General Brewster and Mr. Solicitor-General Keogh. It would appear that some doubt existed in the minds of the guardians as to the religion of foundlings. The Protestant section held that they should be considered of the religion of the State which was incumbered with their maintenance. The Roman Catholic section disputed this proposition, and referred the matter to the commissioners. The commissioners, therefore, submitted certain queries to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General. The result is, that Mr. Brewster thinks with the Protestant and Mr. Keogh with the Roman Catholic section of the board. However, the Poor-law Commissioners have adopted the opinion of the senior legal adviser. The following letter from the Poor-law Commissioners explains the case:—

"Poor-law Commission Office, Dublin,
Dec. 23, 1854.

"Sir,—With reference to the letter addressed to the board of guardians of the North Dublin Union on the 21st August last, on the subject of the religious registry of illegitimate children, I am now directed by the commissioners for administering the laws for the relief of the poor in Ireland to state, that they have received the opinions of the Attorney and Solicitor General on the queries submitted to them on this subject, and I am to inclose copies of the queries and opinions for the information and guidance of the board of guardians.

"The cases which are embraced by the first query, and are of most difficulty in practice, are those of foundling children baptised shortly before admission to the workhouse, while in the hands of the police, or of those to whom they have been intrusted for nurture, and in which it is clear that the baptism can afford no indication as to the religious denomination of the parents.

"In any such case the Attorney-General's opinion is quite clear, that if the child be so young as to be incapable of forming any opinion, the baptism ought not to influence the registry, and that the child should be registered of the religious denomination of the State.

"The opinion of the Solicitor-General, although differing from that of the Attorney-General, as to the effect of a certificate of baptism, unaccompanied by all other information, does not go the length of declaring that where the baptism is known to have taken place very recently before admission to the workhouse, and where, the parents being unknown, it could certainly have no reference to them or to the religious creed, the baptism nevertheless ought to be conclusive on the guardians, and the child, of necessity, registered of the denomination indicated by the religion of the clergyman making the certificate.

"In cases of this description, therefore—that is, in cases where it is known the child is very young, was baptised after desertion, and without any reference to or knowledge of the wishes of its parents or their religious denomination—the commissioners recommend the guardians to be governed by the opinion of the Attorney-General, and to register the child as of the religion of the State.

"The opinions given by the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, in answer to the second query, agree; and in all cases where the guardians have satisfactory evidence of the child's instruction in the tenets and practices of any particular creed, they ought to register its religious denomination accordingly.

"By order of the commissioners,

"W. STANLEY, Secretary.

"To the Clerk, North Dublin Union."

"Copy of Queries.

"First—Does the production of a certificate of baptism, or other evidence that a child has been baptised in a particular religious denomination, render it the duty of the board of guardians to register the child as of that religious denomination, in the absence of any information as to the religious creed of its parents or guardians?

"Second—Ought the guardians, on such evidence of previous religious education as that supplied by the fact that the child can go through the form of blessing itself, or can recite certain prayers, to register the child as of the religious denomination in which that form is practised or those prayers are used?

"Copy.—Opinion of the Attorney-General.

"To first query—I have fully conferred with the Solicitor-General on this case, and we have agreed that each should state his opinion. Mine is, that the mere production of a certificate of baptism does not render it the duty of the board of guardians to register a child, so young as to be incapable of forming any opinion of its own, of the religious denomination of the clergyman who has given the certificate. What effect the production of other evidence may have must depend upon its nature and sufficiency, and no answer generally applicable can be given to that part of the first query. The difficulty will arise, for the most part, if not exclusively, in cases of deserted children of very tender years, the religion of whose parents is unknown; in such cases (according to Mr. Blackburne's opinion of 1842, in which I have already expressed my concurrence) it is the duty of the board of guardians to register and educate the child in the religion of the State. The onus of proving that they ought to register and educate it in any other lies on those who require them to do so. This can only be done by proving that the religion of the child's parent was not only not that of the State, but was that in which they require it to be educated; for the question in effect excludes cases of orphans, whose religion may in certain cases be determined by their guardians or sponsors. This it is which raises the question—"To what extent is the certificate of baptism of a deserted child evidence of the religion of its parent?" It appears to me, in the absence of any other proof whatever, (a case, however, in my opinion, not merely hypothetical, but almost impossible), that the certificate is no evidence either way; for it does not appear whether the baptism took place before or after the desertion; it may as well have been before as after; and if so, it is obvious that it can afford no evidence as to the parent's religion. It therefore appears to me, that it is not the mere certificate of baptism, but the time at which it took place, and the circumstance of it, that must be considered, in order to arrive at any reasonable inference as to what the religion of the parent of a deserted child may have been.

"Second query—If it can be ascertained that the child has been instructed in the tenets and practices of any particular religious denomination, the guardians ought not to allow its religious opinions or belief to be disturbed—at least, unless its parent actually interferes to direct its religious education.

"December, 1854.

"A. BREWSTER."

"Copy.—Opinion of the Solicitor-General.

"I have conferred with the Attorney-General on this case, and regret that he and I do not arrive at the same conclusion on the first query. The question, put in distinct terms, admits that the guardians are altogether without information as to the religious belief of the parents or guardians of a child, save so far as they may be guided by the fact of the baptism of the child as of a particular religious denomination of Christians. In that case (and it is upon it alone I am asked to advise) I am of opinion that the guardians cannot throw out of consideration the fact of baptism. In the absence of all other information, it seems to me to raise a strong presumption that the person who had the child baptised was of the religious denomination in which he caused that sacrament to be administered; and I can see no valid reason for assuming that the person so in charge of the child was not its parent; but, on the contrary, the natural inference appears to me to be, that the child was baptised at the desire of its parent, and in the same religious denomination to which the parent belonged. I therefore do consider, in the absence of all other information, the production of a regular certificate of baptism, or other sufficient evidence that a child has been baptised in a particular religious denomination, renders it the duty of the board of guardians to register the child as of that religious denomination in which it has been baptised.

"As to the second query, I entertain no doubt that the guardians, on such evidence of previous religious education as that supplied by the fact that the child can go through the form of blessing itself, or can recite certain prayers, ought to register the child as of the religious denomination in which that form is practised or those prayers are used. I am not asked to give any opinion upon the questions submitted some years since to Mr. Blackburne; but I may add, that in arriving at the conclusion I have above expressed, I have been much influenced by the manifest intention of the Legislature, as declared in the Irish Poor Relief Act, to discountenance all interference with the religion of the inmates of workhouses, whether adults, children under the protection of their parents, or orphans.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 10, 1855.

THE "cold shade of aristocracy," which is said to fall upon our civil and military departments, is not altogether absent from the legal profession. It is often asserted, that, as a general rule, success attends the industrious, able, learned lawyer, whatever may be his want of fortune or of family; while incapacity, indolence, and ignorance are soon discovered, and fall from their inherent weakness, although they may attach to wealth and station. Applied to practising lawyers, this is a tolerably accurate view, (not, however, without many painful exceptions); the real, working, public part of the Profession tries the man; and clients are seldom so hardy or so foolish as to intrust their dearest interests to an incompetent attorney or advocate after he has proved his incompetency. It must also be admitted, that the judges of our superior courts are generally the right men for the office; the appointment of them is a matter of such interest to the public and the Profession—so fully canvassed, and attended by such important results upon the administration of justice—that the influence of family connexions, or college friendships, or past or future favours, dares not often to intrude upon these occasions. There are, however, pleasant, snug appointments, every now and then turning up, of a more limited and private character, exciting little interest beyond the district for which the appointment is made—comparatively easy berths, with good salaries—to be distributed among lawyers. The question is now no longer with clients, who look after their own interests, or with offices guarded by the vigilance of the press and public opinion, but with such appointments as may be dealt with quietly and safely. Let it not, however, be supposed that they are unimportant in their consequences to the public. No office connected with the exercise of judicial functions can be otherwise than of public importance. How are these appointments made? Are they given to the hard-working, clear-headed, industrious men who have gained the confidence of many by their skill, their learning, and their experience, and to whom such offices would be fitting rewards, as well as material aids in their laborious career? The value to the public of such men—the proper men for the proper places—can scarcely be estimated. But all such considerations are overlooked in favour of some connexion, some claim, some friendship, or some mysterious influence with the powers that be. Men utterly unknown to the public, scarcely known even by name to the Profession, are made county court judges, stipendiary magistrates, recorders, and revising barristers—for what reason no one upon earth, except the appointor and appointee and their friends, can tell. It may sometimes be guessed by the name of the party, or his connexion, proximate or remote, with another name. If the gross jobbing of such transactions were not sad and disastrous in the extreme, it would be ludicrous in its aspect and consequences. Men not only unfit, but the most unfit, are all at once placed on the judgment seat. If the Hon. A. B. happens to have had his name in the Law List as a Chancery barrister, make him a stipendiary magistrate or recorder, who has nothing to do with any law but criminal law. If the cousin of Lord C. D. knows one thing, and that one thing happens to be criminal law, make him a county court judge, who has no jurisdiction over crimes; and so on through the catalogue.

Extraordinary notions of another character sometimes influence those in office, who have the patronage of law appointments. Acting conscientiously, they feel disinclined to bestow their favours on their own relatives, and turn a deaf ear to the voice of friendship. They fear public opinion; they are alarmed lest the capacity of their relatives or their friends should be called in question. But let some candidate present himself backed by "political influence," it matters little how incapable he may be, or how little fit to discharge, either with credit to himself or with satisfaction to the public, the duties of the appointment, "political influence" carries the day; and the virtuous patron, who has withstood the claims of kith and kin, yields to the paramount influence of "politics."

They who have the power of appointment in these cases are highly culpable for its frequent perversion and abuse. We hope that the time will come when they, together with other authorities, will be called to account for their violation of a sacred trust.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

It is stated by the reporter for the Norfolk Circuit, that in the calendar for Aylesbury the value of the articles alleged to have been stolen is, in all the instances, below that which is the standard proposed in Lord Cranworth's bill, namely, 10s. He then asks, "What test is to be applied in order to arrive at the value of stolen property? Is it to be the sworn judgment of an independent valuer? or is it to be the discretion of the prosecutor, backed by some sympathising policeman? Unless it be the former," he adds, "it will be almost in the power of any unscrupulous prosecutor to take the law, as it were, into his own hands; for very few persons of the class among which prisoners are found will understand the 'right of option' to be extended to them by the bill, any more than now they do the distinction between asking a question and making their defence."

Reviews.

The New Common-law Procedure under the Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, and the New Rules on Practice and Pleading, with Forms, Tables of Fees, Costs, &c.; to which are added an Introduction to the Equitable Jurisdiction of Courts of Law, the Evidence Amendment Statutes, and copious Index. By PHILIP FRANCIS, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. [W. Maxwell. 1854.]

The Common-law Procedure Act, 1854; with Practical Notes; an Introduction, explaining the Nature and Extent of the Equitable Jurisdiction conferred on the Superior Courts of Common Law, the Changes effected in the Law of Evidence, and the Alterations in Practice introduced by the Statute; and a copious Index. By ROBERT MALCOLM KERR, Barrister at Law. [Butterworths. 1854.]

The Common-law Procedure Act, 1854; with Treatises on Injunction and Relief. By H. T. HOLLAND and T. CHANDLESS, Jun., Barristers at Law. Also, a Treatise on Inspection and Discovery. By C. E. POLLOCK, Barrister at Law; together with Notes, Cases, Index, and the New Rules and Forms of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854. [S. Sweet. 1854.]

THE Common-law Procedure Acts, having worked great practical changes in our system of jurisprudence, and forming in themselves a new code of practice and pleading in the courts of common law, have found many editors, as well as readers, of their provisions. In addition to the three books whose titles are given above, and which we must content ourselves with reviewing on the present occasion, we have just received Mr. Finlason's "Common-law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, with Notes, the New Rules framed under both, and an Introduction;" and Mr. Mayne's "Treatise on Equitable Defences and Replications."

Mr. Francis is kindly, and we think wisely, sheltered under one roof the Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, those "twin sisters," together with their respective progenies—the practice and pleading rules of Hilary Term, 1853, and of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854. His book contains also a brief introduction to the equitable jurisdiction conferred upon Courts of law, and the evidence amendment statutes, (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83), rendering parties to a cause, and the husbands and wives of parties, competent witnesses. These latter statutes are added as "forming 'an important part of the reform of common-law procedure during the last few years.'" (Preface). Decisions of recent date are noted under the sections to which they refer, and there are copious extracts from the Reports of the Common-law Commissioners. The editor assumes that sect. 68 has given "a means at 'common law of enforcing specific performance of a 'contract or duty in matters concerning private rights,' (p. 258), which, to say the least of it, is extremely doubtful*"; and states that the intent of the section (sect. 83) allowing equitable defences is, that whenever relief in equity would be granted to either party by injunction, perpetual or conditional, to stay proceedings at law, the same grounds shall afford a defence in courts of law. The Court of Exchequer, however, in The Mines Royal Societies v. Magnay, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 1028), has decided that it is only where the grounds are such as to entitle the party to a perpetual injunction that they can be pleaded under this section. That this was the intention of the learned commissioners is clear by the extract given from their report at p. 260 of this book, where they say, "We think that Courts 'of common law ought to be empowered to receive 'such defences by way of plea in every case in which 'the party pleading them would be entitled to unconditional relief by injunction.'"

Mr. Francis points out (p. 270) that the arbitration clauses in the act have removed the objection to Courts of law entertaining questions of complex accounts; but it is very doubtful whether the objection to partners suing each other at law in respect of a partnership matter is obviated.

Mr. Kerr begins with an introduction of ten chapters, a subdivision of the subject adopted "solely with a 'view to precision and brevity.'" (Preface). They contain an outline of the following subjects:—1. Specific performance, (which he thinks may probably be enforced with regard to contracts). (P. x). 2. Injunction. 3. Discovery. 4. Equitable defences. 5. Proceedings on the trial of issues of fact. 6. Proceedings after the trial. 7. Execution by the attachment of debts. 8. Summary proceedings in court, (affidavits, &c.) 9. Evidence. 10. Amendments in the procedure of the Courts, (new trials, revivor, ejectment, and execution). The act is then given, with notes appended to the different sections. The stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34, for compelling the attendance of witnesses from any part of the United Kingdom, and a full index, complete the work.

The ten chapters to which we have referred describe the state of the law as it existed at the time of the passing of the statute upon those subjects which are affected by it, and point out the changes which are certain or likely to ensue from its provisions. This is done for the most part in the clear and forcible language of the Common-law Commissioners, which no doubt affords on occasions a key to the language of the act, but which rather shews what was intended to be done than what has actually been done. In a recent case in the Exchequer two learned judges protested against the report being cited in argument for the purpose of construing the statute. (Martin v. Hemming, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1002).

Mr. Kerr points out the blunder committed by the Legislature in the 88th section, which enacts, that the Courts of law may, upon summary application, exercise the same jurisdiction as may, under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, intituled "An Act to limit the Responsibility of Shipowners in certain Cases," be exercised by any Court of equity; the fact being, that the day before the passing of the Procedure Act of 1854, the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, had received the royal assent, and had entirely repealed the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 159. Under the latter statute, therefore, the Court of Chancery had then no jurisdiction in the matter, although it had under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, which vested afresh in the Court of Chancery the jurisdiction it had previously exercised. (See sects. D. iii—D. vi, D. xv).

We think Mr. Kerr is incorrect in stating that the 18th section, altering the rules of practice respecting the addresses of counsel to a jury, does not extend to a trial before a judge without a jury, (Pref. vii, and also p. 14), because by the 1st section of the act it is enacted, that "the proceedings upon and after such trial, (i. e. before a judge alone), as to the power of the court or judge, the evidence, and otherwise, shall be the same as in the case of trial by jury."

We regret to find that Mr. Kerr, when commenting upon the arbitration clauses, (p. xxxi), has cast a grave and sweeping imputation upon his professional brethren. "A reference," he says, "if made to a lawyer appointed by the parties, may nevertheless continue to be the tedious, expensive, and unsatisfactory proceeding which it has hitherto been; for the costs to be incurred in three months may easily be made to exceed the value of the subject-matter in dispute. Any party to an action on whom an arbitration is forced should therefore leave the reference to be made to an officer of the court, or to a county court judge. Neither will have any interest to prolong the proceedings by frequent adjournments; and the conduct of either, if faulty, may be brought before the Court; while the parties to the action have in the position of the arbitrator some guarantee for the proper conduct of the reference."

In direct contradiction to Mr. Kerr, we maintain, and we do so with some practical experience on the subject, that references to lawyers are far more satisfactory than references to county court judges or to the Masters of the courts. If it is a mere question of taxation of an attorney's bill, by all means refer it to a Master, who is better qualified than any one else to decide such matters. Meetings under a reference should be at short intervals from each other, and reasonably long in point of duration. The Masters, as well as the county court judges, however, are much employed in the exercise of their proper functions, and can seldom afford the time required to carry on references in a proper manner. From these causes, as well as from others which we need not now specify, we have known such references prove most tedious, expensive, and in several instances utterly abortive. We deny that lawyers prolong meetings for their own interest. Sometimes it is necessary to do so for the real interest of their clients; sometimes it is the fault of their clients and their witnesses. That there are exceptions to this observation we do not deny, but we are happy to know that they are comparatively rare. For honesty and fairness the awards of lawyers are above suspicion.

The work of Messrs. Holland and Chandlees is introduced by an able and useful treatise on Inspection and Discovery, by Mr. Charles Edward Pollock. This is in effect a new edition of his former work on the same subject, with the addition of later cases, and observations on the extended powers given by the last Procedure Act. It therefore includes the law relating to discovery, both by the inspection of documents and by the delivery of interrogatories. The subject is subdivided, so as to comprehend inspection at common law, and also under the stats. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 98, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. The doctrine of discovery in equity is fully considered and clearly stated. This is succeeded by a treatise upon injunctions in equity and under the Procedure Act of 1854, containing the leading cases which have been decided upon the subject, alphabetically arranged. Then follow observations upon relief in equity, and, under the act, embracing equitable defences, upon which the editors express an opinion that has been subsequently confirmed by the Court of Exchequer in the case above cited, viz. "That 'it was not intended to include cases in which cross 'equities would arise, but to confine the jurisdiction of 'the Courts of common law to that broader and more 'simple class of cases in which a Court of equity would 'feel itself at liberty to give 'perpetual' relief against 'a judgment unlogged by any conditions or stipulations.'" (P. 165).

The statute itself is then given, and the notes to the respective sections are carefully written, being suggestive rather than dogmatic in their character.

We especially refer to the note appended to the 68th section, to which the editors give a more limited, but probably a more correct, construction than has generally been adopted, being of opinion that it alters the machinery by which a mandamus is obtained, but does not confer upon common-law Courts any power of enforcing specific performance of a contract*.

The act 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, above referred to, is inserted in the appendix, probably by an oversight, although it is stated on the fly-leaf at the commencement to have been repealed, and in fact re-enacted by the stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120. The Rules of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and a full analytical index, complete the work.

In reviewing these books our object has not been to compare their relative merits, but rather to give an outline of their contents, and to call the attention of our readers to some of their principal features.

THE LAW OF BLOCKADE.

"During the short peace consequent on the treaty of Amiens, in 1802, France reverted to her policy of monopolising the trade of her colonies, and thus shut their ports against all vessels but her own. When, however, the war was in the following year resumed, she repeated her former invitation to neutral vessels, and thus resigned her colonial trade into the hands of nations not at war with this country, and which under the cover of their neutrality indirectly promoted that trade and commerce which France herself, from her maritime weakness and fear of capture of her convoys, was incapable of assisting. Thereupon the English Government published instructions which subjected to seizure all vessels carrying on trade between the colonies of France and any country save the mother country of the neutral trader; and the judge of our Prize Court (Lord Stowell) did not hesitate to enforce those instructions; and moreover, that eminent American jurist, Chancellor Kent, although the practice strongly conflicted with the commercial interests of his own country, and was directly at variance with the principle of 'freedom of ship freedom of goods,' did not hesitate to say, 'To me the rule of 1766 seems one of the most moderate and unobjectionable of belligerent claims.'

"When the kingdom of Hanover was, in 1806, taken possession of by Prussia, at the instigation of Napoleon Buonaparte, a proclamation, emanating ostensibly from the King of Prussia, but virtually the act of Buonaparte himself, was put forth declaring 'the ports of the North Sea, as well as the rivers flowing into it, closed against British shipping and commerce, as they were at the time when the French troops occupied Hanover.' As a measure of retaliation, the English Government declared the mouths of the rivers Ems, Weser, and Elbe blockaded, and also laid an embargo on all Prussian vessels and property in the ports of Great Britain. Less than a month afterwards another more comprehensive order was issued, extending the blockade to all ports between the Elbe and Brest, thus including the ports of Holland, those of Prussia on the German Ocean, and the whole sea-board of France. This was derisively styled 'the paper blockade.' Hence resulted the Berlin and Milan decrees of Buonaparte, and the Orders in Council of the British Government, put forth, the former in 1806, the latter in 1807, the combined effect of which for a time paralysed the industrial energies and all but annihilated the trade of Great Britain.

"After being in force for nearly five years, the Orders in Council were rescinded, in consequence of their manifest disastrous results having been incontrovertibly proved by evidence taken before the House of Commons, and so clearly and forcibly demonstrated by Lord (then Mr.) Brougham in his well-known speech in Parliament.

"The history of these Orders in Council is thus briefly but graphically given in the Edinburgh Review for July, 1812:—'These Orders in Council took their origin in a decree promulgated by Buonaparte, at Berlin, on the 21st November, 1806, by which, in the usual style of that personage, he declared the United Kingdom to be in a state of blockade; that all commodities of English origin, or belonging to Englishmen, were good prize; and that no ship from England or her colonies, or which should have touched there, should be admitted into any harbour belonging to France or occupied by her troops. This bravado was followed on our part by an Order in Council dated the 9th January, 1807, by which we interdicted neutrals from the whole coasting trade from one part of France to another; and in November, 1807, a series of new orders was promulgated, by which we declared that we would permit no trade with France and her dependencies except through England; all neutrals bound to those countries being required, in the first instance, to touch at our ports, and pay a duty to our Government; and that every vessel which had a certificate of origin on board should be declared lawful prize. To which extraordinary edict France finally replied by what has been called the Milan decree, declaring in substance that any vessel which in any way submitted to our orders of the 11th November, or which had been searched in the course of her voyage by an English cruiser, should be considered as lawful prize. This is the sum of these unprecedented State documents; and the consequence was, that between the French decrees and the English orders all neutral trade was effectually annihilated.'

"The effect of these decrees of Buonaparte and the orders of the British Government did not bear alone upon the commerce of England, or even of Europe. Their baneful influence extended across the Atlantic. The United States of America, finding their maritime trade which they had carried on with neutral ports closed, or rendered highly dangerous from fear of the capture of their merchantmen, or confiscation of their merchandise, at the hands of both France and England, passed an act forbidding all friendly intercourse with either of these countries so long as their restrictive measures remained in force. This induced the English Government to rescind its orders, so far as regarded American vessels and their cargoes of American property. That relaxation, however, was based on the proviso that the Government of the United States should no longer close their ports against our vessels either of war or commerce. Before, however, these concessions were known in America, that country had already declared war with Great Britain, mainly on the ground of her offensive Orders in Council; but the right of search of American vessels for British seamen, claimed and enforced by Great Britain, was a powerful stimulant in provoking feelings of hostility. The right of search has always been a subject of contest and dispute; it is but natural that every nation should consider it an indignity to have its vessels stopped in their course, and overhauled under suspicion of having contraband articles on board, whether in the shape of merchandise or human beings; although it consists with reason, as well as with the recognised law of nations, that in time of war belligerents must insist upon that right, if they would prevent their enemy from receiving from neutrals, or by their agency, warlike implements or materials.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 17, 1855.

THE English are essentially a people of conservative tendencies, and love to preserve intact the institutions which, founded by the wisdom of their forefathers, have been handed down to them through successive ages. Hence the primary difficulty of introducing reforms, whether of a social, political, or legal nature. Notwithstanding, however, this characteristic of our countrymen, let a particular reform be once introduced, and let it obtain possession of the popular or parliamentary mind, they become so enamoured of it as to think that it cannot be pushed too far; they hurry, as it were, to the very verge of a precipice, and then, if they do not go over it, they become panic-stricken, retrace their steps with indecent haste, until they fall into the opposite extreme, and settle down more conservative than ever. Such will probably be the fate of law reform, the prevalent hobby of the present day. There was much, there is still some, need of improvement in our laws. We have always supported the movement in this direction, and will continue to support it, so long as it pursues a safe and moderate course; but we protest against the half and quarter measures incessantly brought forward for law amendment; not parts of a comprehensive and harmonious system, nor adapted to such a system of jurisprudence as we possess, but little disjointed alterations, which stuff our statutes with useless, hurtful, and piecemeal provisions. In the words of an old proverb, "it is better to buy a new kettle than to be always tinkering."

No. 10, VOL. I., NEW SERIES.

The run at the present moment is against one of the highest privileges we enjoy—at all events, in criminal procedure—viz. trial by jury. Within the last few years this privilege, so lauded and venerated by our ancestors, has been much weakened. The judges of the county courts were first empowered to decide civil cases without the intervention of a jury. The power was then extended, by the Common-law Procedure Act, to the judges of the superior courts at Westminster, and to magistrates in certain criminal cases, under the Juvenile Offenders Act. It is now further assailed in the bill lately introduced into the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, who proposes to give jurisdiction to two justices to deal summarily with larcenies where the value of the property stolen does not exceed 10s., and in such case to authorise them to inflict imprisonment, with hard labour, for one year. It is further proposed, that if the prisoner pleads guilty, the magistrates may sentence the offender, whatever be the value of the property. The main arguments in support of this measure are two—First, that by the law as it at present stands, where a prisoner has been guilty of some petty theft, and is committed for trial, his imprisonment before his trial often exceeds the amount of punishment which would be allotted to his offence after a verdict of guilty. Such cases doubtless do occur, but they are few in number, and of too isolated a character to form a basis for legislation. Secondly, it is urged that there would be a great saving in the expenditure of the county rates, which we fully admit. A very large number of the cases tried at quarter sessions are larcenies, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed 10s.; but we presume considerations of economy will not be allowed to outweigh those which are due to the impartial, unsuspected administration of justice, and to the protection of those who are accused of having committed crimes. The proposal is nothing more nor less than this—to transfer to two magistrates, acting without a jury or a bar, and often without even a reporter for the press to check them, the power of convicting for felony, and of imposing imprisonment, with hard labour, for one year, instead of having such cases tried at quarter sessions by a jury in a public court, attended by a bar and by reporters for the press. Do the decisions of magistrates in petty sessions give so much satisfaction that we can safely intrust them with this power? Have we forgotten even very recent instances of magisterial justice and wisdom? The power of summary conviction, as it is at present vested in magistrates, is an extraordinary power, unknown to the common law; but its limits are in general accurately defined by the statute under which the proceedings are taken, and from which alone the magistrate derives his power; the offence never exceeds a misdemeanour of a comparatively petty character, and the punishment limited by the statute is, in general, imprisonment for three months. A clear distinction has been hitherto preserved between such cases and felonies, and magistrates have never yet had the power to brand a man as a felon for the rest of his life without the verdict of a jury having first been pronounced upon his guilt. At quarter sessions, the Bench, the Bar, and the Jury are checks as well as aids to each other. If the Bench or the prosecuting counsel unduly strain the case against the prisoner, the members of the Bar who are present, and sometimes the jury, will interfere in his behalf. Nice distinctions often arise as to what constitutes larceny—sometimes intricate points as to the admissibility and relevancy of evidence. Deprive the prisoner of his trial by jury, alter the constitution of the Court, dispense with the assistance of the Bar and the supervision of the press, what aids remain to enable the magistrates satisfactorily to administer justice, or what checks are left to insure to the prisoner a fair trial? The respect which is paid to the law in this country is founded upon a belief that justice is in general impartially administered, and that if a poor man is charged with an offence, it is known that he will be tried, not by the titled, the wealthy, or the powerful, but by a jury of men approaching his own station; and whatever may be the result, he feels some satisfaction that his case has been thus decided. His censure must fall upon his own order, rather than upon those above him. There are few of our readers who have not heard of the remark of the convicted thief, who, when sentenced to imprisonment by a magistrate, answered that he should not have minded it if he had been tried in a real court by a real judge.

It must not be forgotten that the jurisdiction exercised by justices of the peace is open to all the objections that attach to local jurisdictions as such. They probably know the prosecutor; they know, or may fancy they know, something of the prisoner; have heard of his being of a sportsmanlike turn, and of his frequenting beer-houses; the offence may have been freely canvassed by the judge and his neighbours before the trial of the party charged with it.

But then, it is said, the prisoner has an option whether he will be tried by jury. Is not the fact of giving this option in itself a proof of the doubts which exist in the minds of the framers of this measure as to the soundness of its principle? But whether it be so or not, we see but little safeguard in this optional reservation of the common-law right. Those who are charged with offences for the first time, at all events, will scarcely ever understand the meaning of the option, or will believe (and not always without foundation) that if they decline the jurisdiction before which they are brought in the first instance, they will be more hardly dealt with, as regards their committal and the refusal of bail, and as regards their sentence, if they should be found guilty at the sessions.

We are next told that the value of the article stolen is fixed at a low standard. But what of that if the offence be a felony, and the person convicted be ever after regarded as a felon, not only in the law, but in the eyes of his own class, and of those who might otherwise enable him to earn his bread when he came out of prison? The value of the article (if it can be accurately ascertained) does not render the case less complicated or difficult in its circumstances, nor exclude those questions relating to the nature of the offence, and the evidence by which it should be supported, which are constantly arising in our courts of criminal jurisdiction.

Upon the subject of the value of the article stolen, as of punishment to be awarded, we fear the framers of the bill had but very crude and vague ideas, as well as very little confidence in the new principle they seek to introduce; for upon an objection being started to the investiture of magistrates with so much power as was at first proposed, namely, over larcenies, where the value of the subject-matter did not exceed 20s., and with authority to imprison for two years, the Lord Chancellor on the very next evening reduced the value and punishment by one-half!

We believe that no greater evil could befall this country than the abolition of trial by jury in criminal matters. All lawyers who have had most experience in such cases will, we are satisfied, indorse our opinion upon this subject; and we once heard an eminent member of the Bar say, that he thought trial by jury of more importance to the people of this country than the House of Commons itself. If, however, another tribunal is to be substituted for a jury, it is to be devoutly hoped that it will be one possessing more of the public confidence than has generally been awarded to two justices sitting in petty sessions.

PRESUMPTION OF SURVIVORSHIP.

On a former occasion, when alluding to the case of Underwood v. Wing, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 169), in which it was held, that husband and wife being washed overboard from a ship in distress during a gale of wind, and drowned, there was no presumption of survivorship, we stated that the views propounded upon this subject by Mr. Best, in his "Principles of the Law of Evidence," had been fully confirmed by that decision. We now subjoin an extract from that part of the book to which we alluded. (Best's Princ. Ev. 478, 2nd ed.):—

"As connected with the subject of the continuance of human life, it remains to notice a class of cases which have embarrassed, more or less, the jurists and lawyers of every country. We allude to those unfortunate cases which have from time to time presented themselves, where several individuals, generally of the same family, have perished by a common calamity, such as shipwreck, earthquake, conflagration, or battle, and where most usually the priority in point of time of the death of one over the rest would exercise an influence on the rights of third parties. The civil law and its commentators were considerably occupied with questions of this nature, and it seems to have been a general principle among them, (subject, however, to exceptions), that where the parties thus perishing together were parent and child, the latter, if under the age of puberty, was presumed to have died first; but if above that age, the rule was reversed. In the case of husband and wife, the presumption seems to have been in favour of the survivorship of the husband. The French authors also, both ancient and modern, have taken much pains on this subject. All the theories that have been formed respecting it are based on the assumption that the party deemed to have survived was likely, from superior strength, to have struggled longer against death than his companion. Now, even assuming that prima facie a male would struggle longer against death than a female, a person of mature age than one under that of puberty, or very far advanced in years, the position can at best only hold good as a general rule; for not only in particular instances might the superior strength or health of the party supposed to be the weaker reverse all, but the rules rest upon the hypothesis that both parties were in exactly the same situation with respect to the impending danger—a circumstance, generally speaking, unascertainable in the fury of a battle, or the horrors of an earthquake or shipwreck. Add to this, that, according to some modern physiologists, in certain species of deaths the strongest perish first*.

"However this may be, in opening the door to this class of questions the lawyers of Rome and France lost sight of this salutary maxim, 'Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur.' The English law has judged more wisely; for, notwithstanding some questionable dicta, the true conclusion from the authorities seems to be, that it recognises no artificial presumption in cases of this nature, but leaves the real or supposed superior strength of one of the persons perishing by a common calamity to its natural weight, i. e. as a circumstance proper to be taken into consideration by a jury or ecclesiastical judge, but which, standing alone, is insufficient to shift the burden of proof. When, therefore, a party, on whom lies the onus of proving the survivorship of one individual over another, has no other evidence than the assumption, that, from age or sex, that individual must be taken to have struggled longer against death than his companion, he cannot succeed. But then, on the other hand, it is not correct to suppose that the law presumes both to have perished at the same moment; this would be establishing an artificial presumption against manifest probability. The practical consequence is, however, nearly the same, because, if it cannot be shewn which died first, the question will be treated by the tribunal as a thing unascertainable, and that, for all that appears to the contrary, both individuals may have died at the same moment."

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—TRINITY TERM, 1855.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

* "See Beck's Juris. 397, 7th ed., where is related an incident furnished by a modern traveller, who, in giving an account of a caravan coming in want of water in a Nubian desert, says that 'the youngest slaves bore the thirst better than the rest; and that while the grown-up boys all died, the children reached Egypt in safety.' The same author adds, 'As to habit and variety of constitution, all such as have a tendency to affections of the head and lungs should be deemed the first victims, in case the causes of death are of a description to affect these. And the moral condition must not be overlooked: the brave survive the fearful and the nervous.' We subjoin the following statement, though not from a work of authority:—'It seems that death from hunger occurs sooner in the young and robust, their vital organs being accustomed to greater action than those of persons past the adult age.' (Chambers's Miscellany, vol. 8, p. 119)."

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Trinity Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Friday, the 11th day of May next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Friday, the 18th day of May next, and will be continued on the Saturday and Monday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Friday morning, the 18th May, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Saturday morning, the 19th May, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Monday morning, the 21st May, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Monday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours in the ensuing examination to have mastered the First, second, seventh, eighth, and fifteenth chapters of Hallam's Constitutional History; the chapter in Foster's Crown Law relating to the Law of Treason, and the chapter on the same subject in Mr. Stephen's edition of Blackstone's Commentaries; the chapters in Rapin's History of England containing the reign of Charles I.; and those in Tindal's continuation of Rapin, or Belsham's History, containing the reign of William III.; and the first volume of Clarendon's History of the Rebellion.

He will expect them to be acquainted with the remarkable State Trials in the reigns of Charles II and William III.

He will expect the candidates for a pass to be able to answer any question bearing upon the leading events of English History, and to be well acquainted with

The first, eighth, and thirteenth chapters of Hallam's Constitutional History, and the chapters in Rapin containing the History of Charles I.

The READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; the Act for the Improvement of Equity Jurisdiction, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

2. White & Tudor's Leading Cases, (with the Notes), vol. 1, particularly as regards the subjects of Voluntary Settlements, and the Rights of Married Women recognised in a Court of Equity only.

Candidates for certificates of fitness to be called to the Bar will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for the studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

The READER ON THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Williams—Real Property; Stephen—Commentaries, vol. 1; Sugden—Powers, vol. 1.

2. The Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27.

3. The Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 24—33.

4. Sales of Real Estate by Trustees or Executors in pursuance of a trust or a power; and the Liability of Purchasers to see to the Application of their Purchase Money. (Sugden—Powers, vol. 1, p. 129; vol. 2, p. 464; Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G., Mac., & G. 635).

Candidates for honours will be examined in all the foregoing books and subjects. Candidates for a certificate will be examined in those mentioned in part 1.

The READER ON JURISPRUDENCE and the CIVIL LAW proposes to examine candidates for honours in the following subjects:—

1. The first two books of the Commentaries of Gaius.
2. The last two titles of the fiftieth book of the Digest, "De Verborum Significatione" and "De Regulis Juris."

3. The sixth, seventh, and eighth Lectures of Kent on International Law.

4. The tenth, eleventh, and twelfth chapters of the second book of Grotius, "De Jure Pacis et Belli."

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined in—

1. The first two books of the Institutes of Justinian, with the Notes contained in Sandars's edition.

2. The seventh and eighth Lectures of Kent on International Law.

The READER ON COMMON LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

Candidates for a certificate will be examined in—

1. The ordinary steps and proceedings in an Action at Law as regulated by the stats. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. (This subject may be read from Smith's Elementary View of an Action at Law, 5th ed.)

2. The Nature and Classification of Contracts. (Smith's Lectures on the Law of Contracts, Lect. 1).

3. The Elements of our Criminal Law in relation to the following offences:—Burglary, Simple Larceny at Common Law, and Embezzlement. (Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 12th ed., book 2, part 1, under the above titles).

Candidates for honours will be examined in the first and third of the foregoing subjects, and also in—

4. The Law of Principal and Agent, and of Partners. (Smith's Mercantile Law, 5th ed., book 1, chaps. 2 and 5). In connexion with the Law of Partners should also be read Waugh v. Carver (1 Smith's L. C. 491) and Buckley v. Barber, (6 Exch. 164).

5. The Rights and Obligations of Carriers of Goods and Passengers. (Story on Bailments, 5th ed., chap. 6, arts. 8 and 9).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 24, 1855.

THERE is this peculiarity in trials which are conducted without the intervention of a jury, that the judge decides both the law and the facts, instead of laying down the law for those who are to find the facts. Hence, it is often impossible to ascertain the ground of the decision in trials by judges alone, whether it proceeded on the law or the facts of the case; and if there be an error, whether it consist in ignorance of law or a mistake of facts. This consequence renders it extremely difficult, not only to detect, but also to correct, the fallacy by way of appeal or other proceeding, and to check the recurrence of similar errors. Our readers will remember the difficulty which has been experienced on this account in appealing from the decisions of county court judges, when they have acted without a jury.

There is another distinction of great practical importance between trial by a judge and trial by a jury: the prisoner or defendant may challenge the jury, but has no means of excepting to the judge. Under the Roman law, even in its period of despotism, a recusatio judicis was permitted, which was, in effect, a challenge to the judge; but at the present day, in this land of freedom, no such safeguard is proposed to compensate for the absence of a jury. It is true, that a decision by a judge or magistrate in a matter in which he is interested is voidable (Dimes v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 3 H. L. C. 759) if subsequent proceedings be adopted in order to avoid it; but there is no mode of declining the exercise of jurisdiction by the judge in the first instance.

We trust that these important distinctions will not be overlooked by those members of our Legislature who are about to discuss the Criminal Justice Bill in the House of Commons. In our comments upon this measure last week we stated that even the powers vested in justices for the purpose of summary conviction were guarded to a greater extent than those which are now proposed to be given for the purpose of convicting of felony; and it is certainly remarkable, that while in the former cases a right of appeal is very frequently given, no such right is conferred against the decision of two justices in a case of felony; nor is the conviction (which will be in a general form) to be removed by certiorari or otherwise.

The power proposed to be given to justices over prisoners who plead guilty to the charge brought against them is not liable to the same objections as their jurisdiction over those who deny the charge; and it may be observed, that an authority to convict without a jury, on confession, was conferred upon justices by the stat. 2 Hen. 5, st. 1, c. 4, relating to labourers, which authorised justices to examine labourers on their oath, and on their confession to punish them as if they were convict by inquest. This, and a power of convicting upon view in cases of forcible entries and riots, (12 Rich. 2, c. 2; 13 Hen 4, c. 7), seem to be the only clear instances in which justices of the peace in those early times were authorised to inflict punishment upon their own inquiry and judgment. The first statute upon which a summary conviction by a justice is on record is that of 33 Hen. 8, c. 6, against the practice of carrying daggers or short guns. There appears to have been a conviction on this statute removed into the Court of Queen's Bench as early as the 43rd of Elizabeth; and "this very case," says Mr. Paley*, "affords a proof of the objection which, in the state of manners at that day, might well exist against relaxing the jealousy of the common law, by intrusting anything like arbitrary authority in private hands. It appears that a sheriff's officer, going to execute a writ against a justice of the peace for a debt, and taking with him a hand-gun, from the apprehension of a rescue, the justice, instead of obeying the writ, apprehended, convicted, and imprisoned the officer till he paid a fine of 10*l.*, under colour of the act of Parliament."

While, on the one hand, we are alive to the dangers threatened by the Criminal Justice Bill, on the other we are not insensible to the inconveniences of the present system. There is no doubt that a great number of petty offences are tried at quarter sessions, being a heavy burthen upon the county rates, (which ultimately falls on the Consolidated Fund), and a severe tax upon the time and avocations of the prosecutor and his witnesses. To have such cases satisfactorily decided almost upon the spot where they are alleged to have occurred, and within a very short period after their occurrence, would be a great boon to the community at large. May not a middle course be adopted between the present expensive and dilatory course and the dangerous innovation involved in the bill? Why should not the two justices have power to summon a jury—say of six persons—to try the accused? The trial might then proceed as at quarter sessions. The law and the facts would be adjudicated upon separately; the right of challenge would remain, and the offender would be tried by men approaching his own station in life. It appears that a similar power once existed, and was exercised. It was not until after stat. 36 Edw. 3, st. 1, c. 12, that the general sessions were held only four times a year: that statute commands that they shall be held at least four times; and the subsequent statute (2 Hen. 5, c. 4) adds, "and oftener if need be." The stat. 33 Hen. 8, c. 10, required them to be held every six weeks, which, however, was repealed by the 37 Hen. 8, c. 7. (Paley, p. 5).

Under these circumstances, the holding of petty sessions with a jury would be only consistent with an ancient system of procedure, as well as with that mode of popular trial by which our jurisprudence is distinguished.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

At the Stafford Assizes, Lord Campbell, C. J., animated severely upon the practice of handcuffing and searching prisoners who have not been charged with any act of violence. In the cause (Eggington v. The Corporation of Lichfield) which elicited these remarks, the plaintiff, who had been town clerk to the corporation, had been summarily convicted, under the Municipal Corporation Act, of refusing to deliver up the books, &c. which he had received by virtue of his office, and having been arrested upon a warrant founded on such conviction, had been searched and handcuffed. The action, which was for false imprisonment, was brought not only against the corporation of Lichfield, but also against Mr. Simpson, their town clerk, and Page, a police constable. On the subject of assessing the damages, Lord Campbell, C. J., said he had heard it stated that the jury should give the amount which the most culpable defendant ought to pay; but he was of opinion that the amount should be that which all the defendants ought to pay, because each joint tortfeasor, being made co-defendant, was liable to pay the whole; adding, that the point was as yet undecided.

At the Maidstone Assizes, Mr. Bramwell, Q. C., (presiding in one of the criminal courts), held, after consulting the learned judges on the circuit, that a forgery committed with intent to deceive the party to whom it was uttered, although not with the intent of ultimately defrauding such party, came within the legal definition of forgery. The jury, by their finding, seemed to be of opinion that the prisoner, who had uttered a forged bill of exchange to A. B., intended thereby to deceive him at the time, but also intended to pay the amount of the bill when it became due.

Sir John Pakington, in moving, on the 17th instant, for leave to bring in a bill for the education of the people of this country, after paying a well-deserved compliment to Mr. Horace Mann, barrister at law, for his very able report on the census, proceeded to lay before the House some interesting statistics upon the subject of his motion. Speaking of the connexion between ignorance and crime, the Right Honourable Baronet said that it was difficult to obtain full information upon the matter, and that our own statistics of crime are very imperfect, especially the returns of summary convictions. In 1846, when the population of England was 17,018,600, the number of persons committed for trial was 25,107, and the number summarily convicted was 35,749, making altogether 60,856 persons convicted of crime. In Austria (one of the best educated countries in Europe) 1 in 300 of the population is detected in crime, while in England 1 in 300 is detected, making a difference of nearly three to one.

Books.

The Common-law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, with Notes and an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Acts of William IV, the recent Statute on Evidence, and the New Rules framed under both the late Acts, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. [Stevens & Norton, 1855.]

A Treatise on Equitable Defences and Replications under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854. By JOHN D. MAYNE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. [Sweet, 1854.]

No one, after perusing Mr. Finlason's work, will deny that he is a gentleman of most laudable industry, delighting in elaborate notes, the Year Books and their successors, through many generations unto the present time. The consequence is, that his annotations are very learned and very long, filling up the page in double columns, while the different sections of the act venture to peep forth by a single line at the top, like a short Zouave endeavouring to look out of a deep trench. We cannot help thinking that Mr. Finlason might spare himself and his readers considerable labour were he to condense his notes into a clear exposition of the subjects discussed in them, giving the principles which may be deduced from the cases, instead of heaps of cases themselves, "like orient pearls at random strung," and rendering his commentary upon a code of practice more practical. He rather overlays the statutes with his notes. After this suggestion, which we offer in a friendly spirit, and with a sense of obligation to Mr. Finlason for the body of useful law which he has undoubtedly placed before his readers, we proceed to sketch an outline of his work. Commencing with an introduction and synopsis of the Common-law Procedure Acts, he then gives the statutes themselves, with foot-notes, (we prefer notes following the sections); then, in an Appendix, the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for enabling Courts of law to order the examination of witnesses upon interrogatories and otherwise, (which is useful, as it is referred to by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and incorporated with it); the stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, for shortening the time of prescription in certain cases, (the object of inserting which is not so clear); the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, for the further amendment of the law and the better advancement of justice; the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, relating to costs, notice of action, limitation of actions, and pleas of the general issue under certain acts of Parliament; stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, for removing objections to the admissibility of evidence on the ground of interest, &c., and for rendering parties to actions competent witnesses, (why not also stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, making husband and wife competent for and against each other?); the Pleading and Practice Rules, Hilary Term, 1853, and the Rules of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854. Valuable notes are appended to these rules. It will be seen from this analysis and our former observations, that Mr. Finlason's edition of the acts and rules is comprehensive in its plan and complete in its details. His readers probably will not complain that he gives them so much more in quantity upon the subject than other commentators. The editor seems to be of opinion that the mandamus clause (sect. 68) extends to the specific performance of contracts. (See pp. 417, 421).

Mr. Mayne's book is a useful and appropriate manual on the subjects to which it is devoted. He has judiciously adopted the following classification, treating, under each head, of the several pleas and replications, "upon equitable grounds," that may now be used in a court of common law:—1. Accident. 2. Mistake. 3. Fraud. 4. Liens. 5. Release. 6. Satisfaction—Performance—Election—Statute of Frauds. 7. Set-off. 8. Miscellaneous Defences. 9. Sureties. 10. Trusts. 11. Replication—Striking out Plea. Mr. Mayne points out how far the doctrines of equity may be moulded to the new system of jurisprudence now administered in the courts of common law. He calls attention to the anomaly, that neither equitable pleas nor equitable replications can be pleaded in an action of ejectment, inasmuch as in that form of action there are no pleadings whatever, except the declaration.

JUSTICE IN CALIFORNIA.—The following extract from a letter written by The Times correspondent in California exhibits a new mode of curing flaws in an indictment; it is also a note-worthy illustration of a mayor casting his skin (as it were) for the sake of becoming a "Lynchman."—"An American named Brown was found guilty, after a legal trial, of murder, and condemned to be hung on the same day with a Californian, also legally condemned for another murder. Brown's execution was ordered by the Supreme Court of the State to be stayed on an appeal, on the ground of a flaw in the indictment, which would probably have given him a new trial. The people, however, determined that both criminals should have even-handed justice meted out to them, and after the Californian was executed by the constituted authorities, a mob broke open the prison and hanged Brown. The mayor, after he had performed his part of the legal execution of the Californian, resigned his office, to enable him 'consistently to assist in his private capacity' in the lynching of Brown. By last accounts he was a candidate for his former office, with every prospect of success."

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed Robert Eagle Clarke, of Thetford, in the county of Suffolk, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Norfolk.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

THE following reasons are urged by the "Debtor and Creditor Law Amendment Society" against Lord Brougham's and Messrs. Keating and Mullings's Bills of Exchange Bills, now before the House of Commons:—

"That bills of exchange have been found, by long experience, to be the most convenient mode of acknowledging debts and fixing a time for the payment of them, whilst they constitute an indispensable proportion of the circulating medium of the country.

"That by the passing of the bills in question, or either of them, nearly the whole of the trade of the kingdom now carried on by means of bills of exchange will be utterly destroyed.

"That if the principle of not allowing a debtor to defend proceedings which may be taken against him, unless he can at the outset shew a good defence on the merits, be admitted or established, it ought not to be applicable solely to bills of exchange or promissory notes, but to all debts and claims whatever.

"That no sufficient reason has been shewn for placing the law relating to the recovery of debts on bills of exchange on a different footing to other simple contract debts.

"That Lord Brougham's bill will create great difficulty in cases of bills of exchange or promissory notes payable in towns or places where there are no notaries, inasmuch as the bill provides no remedy for such cases, which will be very frequent, because there are no notaries in the majority of towns in this kingdom, but only in a few of the larger towns and cities, and that therefore the holders of bills or notes will, in such cases, be undeservedly subjected to great risk and perplexity.

"That the revenue now arising from the stamps used on bills of exchange will be seriously decreased, inasmuch as the use of them for commercial purposes will be almost annihilated.

"That the disuse of bills of exchange as a circulating medium will render it necessary to have a very much larger amount of metallic currency in circulation, thus rendering money dear, and partially destroying the effect of the late legislative enactment repealing the usury laws.

"That the passing of either of the bills will practically give to the holder of a dishonoured bill or note a preference over all other creditors, inasmuch as he will, by either of the proposed new modes of procedure, be enabled to take the debtor's effects in execution at the expiration of eight days; whereas another creditor, not being the holder of a dishonoured bill or note, (though he may, in the usual course of business, have given exactly the same period of credit as the creditor holding a bill or note), will be left to his present remedy, of summoning the debtor to the Court of Bankruptcy, by which process the debtor has seven days to appear and admit the debt, and seven days more to arrange with or pay the creditor by whom he has been summoned; thus precluding the less favoured creditor from making his remedy (summary though it be) available in less than fifteen days. That either of the proposed bills will therefore create great facility for collusion between debtors and creditors, and render nugatory the aim and intent of the late enactments respecting bankruptcy, namely, an equitable division of assets amongst the whole body of creditors."

ORDERS IN COUNCIL.—By Orders in Council dated the 28th February, 1855, the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and the Rules thereunder, are applied to the court of record of the borough of Cambridge, called the Court of Pleas; the act is also applied to the courts of record of the borough of Colchester, called the Law Hundred and Foreign Courts; and several of its provisions, with certain modifications, are extended to the court of record for the hundred of Salford, in the county of Lancaster. The application in each case is to take place within one month after the publication of the Orders in the London Gazette, namely, the 2nd March, 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 31, 1855.

It must be admitted by the warmest advocate for trial by jury, that decisions sometimes emanate from the jury-box of so extraordinary a nature as to create reasonable doubts whether we are right in our mode of selecting those who fill it, and requiring unanimity in their finding. Among them are doubtless the ignorant, the prejudiced, the obstinate, and those also of "little learning," who, having once made up their minds to a certain view of a subject, will adhere to that view in spite of every consideration that may be presented to them. That such elements in the jury-box may produce incalculable mischief we think is illustrated by the case of Elizabeth Avis Law, who was tried for murder before Platt, B., at the recent assizes held at Maidstone. The main features of this case were as follows:—A Mrs. Bacon, an elderly lady, had for some years occupied a house at Chatham, and the only person living with her on the 29th January last, the day on which the murder was committed, was the prisoner, a girl of twenty, who had been in Mrs. Bacon's service for two or three months. On the day referred to, at ten minutes past eight in the morning, a woman who supplied Mrs. Bacon with milk knocked at the front door, which was answered by the prisoner, and nothing peculiar was then remarked in her manner or appearance. It was proved that the front door at night was fastened by a lock and chain, but in the day-time it was usual to leave it on the latch. At a quarter past nine two boys had gone to the door, and after knocking and ringing some five minutes, the prisoner was heard coming towards the door, and something was then heard to alide back, as if a bolt was being undone. On the door being opened, the boys saw that the prisoner's throat was cut, and the blood running down her neck from the wound. The lifeless body of the mistress of the house was then found lying upon the threshold of her own bed-room. She was dressed, with the exception of her gown. It was proved that her death, which in all probability had been instantaneous, was caused by repeated blows on the head from some blunt instrument. The face had been washed, and was still wet with blood-stained water. Although the body was found upstairs, yet, upon a minute examination of the premises, it was apparent that the murder had been committed in the lower part of the house, for in the cellar a large quantity of blood was found, and near it a chopper or hatchet used for cutting wood, stained with blood, and having upon it some of the gray hair of the deceased. Blood was traced from the cellar to the privy, and there the dress, the shawl, and some false hair which the deceased had usually worn, were found, all of them saturated with blood. In the cellar there were found a pail containing some bloody water, a tea-kettle, and also a flannel discoloured with blood. In the kitchen, which presented no appearance of any struggle, there was a pool of blood near the dresser, upon which was lying a bloody knife. There was also a mark of blood on the dresser, as if made by a finger, and the pool of blood was near enough to it to admit of a person bleeding there, and putting the knife where it was found. In the prisoner's bed-room a dress which she usually wore in the morning was also found stained with blood, and a bunch of keys belonging to the deceased, which she usually carried about with her, and which would enable the prisoner to obtain access to the boxes in which the deceased usually kept the cash she had in the house, which amounted at the time to 100%. Upon the prisoner's wound being dressed, a piece of paper, marked with blood, dropped from her bosom, and was found to contain a ring and brooch belonging to the deceased. The purse of the deceased, containing money, was discovered in a tub of sand in the cellar, the purse and money being both marked with blood. It was shewn that the body of the deceased was so extremely light that it could be easily lifted, and that the prisoner was possessed of considerable strength. The prisoner had stated, immediately after the occurrence, that two men had done the deed; and subsequently, in a detailed statement, she had described the men as dustmen, who had entered the house by the front door upon her answering their knock; one of them, she stated, attacked her mistress, who ran into the cellar, and the other seized her, and after attempting to take liberties with her, had cut her throat to stop her screaming. She accounted for the possession of the ring and brooch by saying that in her fright she had taken them off the mantelpiece lest the men should take them. Medical men gave it as their opinion, that when the alarm was first raised the murdered woman had been dead some time, whilst the wound in the prisoner's throat was recently inflicted. The partition walls were so thin that a struggle or scream, it was deposed, must have been heard by the neighbours. No men of the description given by the prisoner had been seen in or near the place. And, lastly, the prisoner had been plundering her mistress for some time previously; nothing whatever being missed from the house but such articles as were proved to have been pawned by the prisoner previously to the murder. Thus was the case supported by as perfect a chain of circumstantial evidence as we venture to say was ever presented to a jury. Motive, opportunity, and means were all supplied. Every fact proved tended to exclude the possibility of any other hand having perpetrated the offence. Her statement was utterly irreconcilable with the facts proved. The verdict was, "We do not find the prisoner guilty upon the evidence produced." Upon that jury, it is stated by the local journals, was a staunch advocate for the abolition of the punishment of death, who had declared that should he happen to be upon the jury he would not consent to a verdict which would consign the murderer to the scaffold, let the evidence be what it might. Thus, we fear, justice was defeated, and another added to the list of those instances in which jurymen cannot be brought to confine themselves to their own province, or prevented from considering the effect of their verdict. Can this be provided for? and if so, by what means? are important questions, which arise from the perusal of cases such as the above, and which we hope to discuss in a future number.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In the case of Reg. v. Downes, which was a charge of perjury committed in the county court, and tried at Shrewsbury, (March 22), Lord Campbell, C. J., condemned the practice of subpoenaing in such cases the county court judge to prove the evidence given before him, and suggested that it should in future be proved by the attorney or some other party who was present at the trial of the cause.

In Reg. v. Butcher, tried at Bury, (March 21), for perjury in the Suffolk County Court, it appeared that the summons under which the cause was tried professed to be issued "by leave" of the county court judge, under sect. 60 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, but that the practice in that court was not to require the parties to make a specific application to the judge, but to obtain the leave from a clerk of the court on production to him of an affidavit embodying the requisites for such a proceeding. It was objected that there was no jurisdiction in the county court judge to hear the cause, as the issue of the summons in such a case was a judicial act, which could not be delegated. It became unnecessary to decide the point, but we should think there is little doubt of the objection being well founded.

In Snead and Others v. The Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Company, tried at Hereford, (March 26 and 27), which was an action against the railway company for a breach of contract in not carrying the cattle of the plaintiffs from Leominster to Stamford in time for the fair there, Lord Campbell, C. J., directed the jury, that if there was a verbal contract by the station-master at Leominster with the plaintiffs, that their cattle should reach Stamford in time for the fair, that contract would be binding on the company, and would not be affected by any limitation of the authority of the station-master, of which the plaintiffs knew nothing. Also that a contract made by the station-master was not affected by a notice on the back of the ticket or receipt delivered to the plaintiffs' servant after the contract had been made and the cattle loaded on the trucks, which notice contained the following clause:—"The company is not to be held responsible for carriage or delivery within any certain or definite time, or in time for any particular market." And further, that the notice was of no effect in this case, because a useful section, introduced into stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, by the Earl of Derby, enacted, that unless such a notice was signed by the party receiving the ticket, it should not be binding. The jury found a verdict for the defendants, on the ground that the contract was not proved.

SHORT NOTES IN CONVEYANCING.—No. I.

Deeds of Separation.

An agreement by husband and wife to live separate and apart from each other is against the policy of the law, and will not be executed by a Court of equity; (Lord Langdale in Frampton v. Frampton, 4 Beav. 293); and the reason that this rule has been adopted is, that a man and his wife cannot live in a state of separation from each other without some failure on the part of one or both in the performance of duties in the fulfilment of which society has an interest. (Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., in Cartwright v. Cartwright, 3 De G., Mac., & G. 980). It has, however, been held, that engagements entered into between the husband and a third party shall be held valid and binding, although they originate out of and relate to that unauthorised state of separation in which the husband and wife have endeavoured to place themselves. (Sir W. Grant in Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Mer. 268). The principle which alone seems to be safely deducible from the authorities is, that when a husband has by his deed acknowledged that his wife has a just cause of separation from him, and has covenanted with her natural friends to allow her a maintenance during separation on being relieved from liability to her debts, he shall not be allowed to impeach the validity of that covenant. (Lord Denman in Jones v. Waite, 5 Bing. N. C. 363).

A covenant by a trustee to indemnify the husband against the debts which the wife might contract after a separation is a valuable consideration. (Stephens v.

Olive, 2 Bro. C. C., by Belt, 91). But such a covenant is not the only consideration that will support articles of separation; a covenant to put an end to a suit against the husband in the ecclesiastical court, or to pay him an annuity, (Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405), or to pay his debts, is sufficient; and where there is a covenant by a third person to indemnify the husband against the debts of the wife, a Court of equity will enforce the husband's covenant for the payment of an annuity to the wife. (Sir J. Leach, M. R., in Logan v. Birkett, 1 My. & K. 225). In the case of a wife being absolutely entitled to property for her sole and separate use, she covenanted to pay an annuity to the husband; and the release by the husband of his marital right in the future acquired property of the wife was held to be a good consideration from the husband to support the claim to the annuity. (Logan v. Birkett, 1 My. & K. 225). But an agreement by a wife to waive the further prosecution of an indictment against her husband for an assault, in consideration of his allowing her an annuity by way of separate maintenance, is an illegal contract. (Garth v. Earnshaw, 3 Y. & C. 584). Lastly, it has been recently decided by Sir J. Romilly, M. R., that where a husband has covenanted with a trustee that his wife during her life might live separate from him, that he would not sue her in the ecclesiastical court for living separate, and would not otherwise molest her, the trustee covenanting with the husband to maintain the wife and indemnify the husband, the Court will restrain by injunction the husband from infringing his covenant. (Sanders v. Rodney, 16 Beav. 207).

All provisions which have reference to future separations are against the policy of the law. Any instrument which provides for a present separation, and which prospectively looks to the parties living together again, and then to a future separation, will, so far as it provides for that future separation, never be carried into effect. (Lord Eldon in Westmeath v. Westmeath, cited by Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., in Cartwright v. Cartwright, 3 De G., Mac., & G. 991). Where certain rights in property had been conferred by an ante-nuptial settlement on the intended husband and the intended wife, in the event of the marriage taking place, subject to a proviso for materially varying those rights in a manner favourable to the husband if a separation by reason of any disagreement or otherwise should take place, such a proviso was declared by Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., against public policy, and therefore void. (Cartwright v. Cartwright, 3 De G., Mac., & G. 989). But though a deed providing for a prospective separation is invalid, and a separation being terminated by a reconciliation, a clause to revive the provision for the wife is invalid, yet a provision for her separate use, notwithstanding future reconciliations or separations, is good. (Byrne v. Carey, 13 Ir. Eq. Rep. 1).

The test which the Court applies to deeds of this kind is thus stated by the present Chancellor of Ireland in his elaborate judgment in Byrne v. Carey, (13 Ir. Eq. Rep. 1). In that case a deed recited differences between a husband and wife, and an agreement to execute it in order to secure a maintenance for the wife in case such differences were renewed, and she should thereafter wish to live separate; and as an encouragement and recompense for her care of their children and domestic affairs while they should live together, and in order to secure an annuity to her in case of separation, and as a reward for her services so long as they should live together, the husband assigned certain property to trustees to secure the annuity for the wife's separate use, to commence immediately, and be payable during her life. The deed contained a covenant by the husband to allow the wife, at her option, to live separate, and a covenant by the trustees to indemnify him during the period of separation. "Is the deed," said his Lordship,

"one providing for a future separation? one against the policy of the law, and which would be an inducement to the wife to force a separation, in order to get the provision made by it? It is so far from that, that it provides she is to have the annuity at all events, and at once, and therefore should have a contrary effect; for having this provision while she lives with her husband, and is maintained by him, and only the same provision if she leaves him and has to support herself, she must be a loser by leaving him. It would, indeed, probably be adequate enough for her maintenance, considering the rank in life of the parties. In this view the motives suggested and the recitals are all against the case contended for, and are not within the authorities referred to." His Lordship then commented on Lord Rodney v. Chambers, (2 East, 283); Nicholls v. Danvers, (2 Vern. 671); Wilson v. Muesett, (3 B. & Ad. 743); Frampton v. Frampton, (4 Beav. 287); and Jodrell v. Jodrell, (9 Beav. 45); and having finished his review of the authorities, continued—"Looking, then, at this deed, and seeing that it provides for a present arrangement—the payment to be made at once, and not depending on the contingency of the wife leaving the husband—and being thus so far unobjectionable, I do not think that the recital of the motives of the parties for executing it can invalidate it. That but makes it a voluntary deed; and it is good as a voluntary deed, although it may contain clauses which the Court would not enforce, and which might affect it if the deed depended on them."

Deeds of separation are subject to the stamp duty of 35s. as deeds not otherwise charged, and to the ordinary progressive duty. If, however, by a separation deed a definite sum of money or share of stock be settled, it becomes further liable to ad valorem duty as "a settlement."

REBUTS.

A Letter to the Lord Chancellor on the contemplated Transfer of Land by Register. By JOSEPH GOODEVE, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law. 8vo., pp. 71. [Benning.]

MR. GOODEVE's remarks are directed against the proposed register of titles, which in its most perfect form has been frequently discussed in these pages as Mr. Wilson's plan. The substance of his objections may be very briefly stated; and we, as advocates for Mr. Wilson's plan, propose to subjoin to each objection such answers as may suggest themselves. It will readily be supposed that Mr. Goodeve's argument looks much better in his own statement than in our abridgment; but we will endeavour to state all the material points fairly.

The scheme is recommended to the landowner as tending to economy and facility in dealing with land, and security. Its working must be considered in relation to every kind of dealing with land, and not merely to sales, which have been almost exclusively regarded in the discussion of the question. Land is held either in absolute ownership, or in mortmain or settlement more or less strict. The largest portion of the land—probably two-thirds—is in settlement or mortmain. Property in mortmain is so seldom alienated as to be almost beyond the scope of the measure. The most usual transfers of settled property are not sales, but settlements. The bulk of the settled estates rarely becomes subject to any other dealing with strangers than a lease or a mortgage. "The questions for discussion have been suggested above, as relating to both cost and facility of dealing. Making allowance for those sudden or urgent occasions of sale which brook no delay, the question does in the main practically resolve itself into but one question—the question of cost;” and the question of delay is only noticeable for the sake of theoretical accuracy. [Ans. This is the old objection to change—that things are very well as they are. Under the present system it is almost impossible to realise money by the sale of an estate within three months from the time of resolving to sell; and the process not unfrequently takes as many years—certainly not with the good will of the vendor. Nothing is more common than for the investigation of the title to be made an excuse for delay by a purchaser whose money is not conveniently forthcoming. Even a mortgage, when both parties are equally urgent, generally requires several weeks for its completion. Under the register the interval between the making of the bargain and completion need not be two hours—a matter, surely, of importance in a mercantile country.]

The title of a settlor is not often investigated as upon a sale; and in cases of settlements the cost is merely that of the limited investigation necessary to ascertain the position of the settlor, and the cost of the instrument of conveyance. Both of these causes of expense will continue to exist under the register. There must be an investigation of the title behind the scenes, and there must be a deed of settlement to be kept behind the scenes. In the case of settlement, therefore, the registration will be an addition to the expense, just as at present the cost of a settlement of copyholds is increased by the customary assurances which are superadded to, and not substituted for, the deed of settlement. [Ans. The necessary additional expense of registration will be under 2*l.*, and it may be made much less in small transactions. Beyond the trouble and cost of the simple exchange of certificates, the register can never add either complication or expense to any transaction; but it will frequently facilitate matters even of settlement. For instance, an appointment of new trustees might be made by a simple letter or memorandum signed by the donee of the power, and a transfer on the register. Again: all the provisions inserted in settlements for the assurance of purchasers will be dispensed with, and the settlement will be a mere brief statement of the interests of the parties and the duties of the trustees.]

Next as to sales. In many cases mortgages or conveyances of small portions of large estates are taken upon credit, without much investigation, the title being generally known or believed to be good; and in other cases the range of the purchaser's inquiries is usually limited by special conditions, framed on a preliminary investigation of the title on the vendor's behalf. “To be sure, there is a certain amount of cost involved in this preliminary investigation, but it is of comparatively limited extent, being confined to the preparation of the abstract, (if, indeed, an abstract do not, either in whole or in greater part, already exist), and the fees paid to counsel for its examination, with the preparation of the requisite conditions.” It must be admitted, however, that, “as a general rule, and especially in large transactions, the cost of this preliminary investigation is a great charge upon every occasion of sale.” [This last remark excuses us from answering those which precede it. We believe that the total expense to vendor and purchaser occasioned by the necessity of investigating the history of the title is, on an average, from 4*l.* to 8*l.*, per cent. on the amount of the purchase money—that is to say, from eight to sixteen times the ad valorem stamp duty. But to state the average is to understate the evil. The iniquity of the burthen is in its inequality. We have known the cost of a sale exceed one-third of the purchase money. A case is on record in which the purchaser waived a requisition, which involved an expense exceeding the purchase money, on condition of having the estate conveyed to him for nothing. The costs of the numerous suits for specific performance must be included in the account against the existing state of things.]

Now for the costs of the register. There are thirty-seven millions of acres to be mapped in such a manner as to represent every subdivision of ownership, and enable the definition of every easement and right against the soil. The expense and time necessary to do this, if practicable at all, would be enormous. The original map would cost from 1,250,000*l.* to 2,000,000*l.*, and it must be perpetually revised at a great expense. Then there would be the cost to the parties of the preliminary inquiries, and disputes incident to getting the land on the register. [The truth must be our excuse for saying that this is a ridiculous exaggeration. The expense of making an original survey and map of England and Wales for the purposes of registration would be under an average of 6*d.* per acre, or 927,000*l.* for the whole. But there are now in existence, under the Ordnance and Tithe Commutation Surveys, maps of more than five-sixths of the country, sufficient for the purposes of a register office. It is a mistake to suppose that a Government map, defining the boundaries of each separate ownership, would be necessary, or that the map would ever require revision on the part of the Government. All that is wanted for the purposes of registration is a map containing sufficient details to enable the registrar to convert it into an index to each separate holding. The exact boundaries and details of the separate estate would be given on the map supplied by the parties applying to have their conveyance registered. Thus there would be in the general office, first, a general map of England and Wales, being the index map to the Ordnance survey; secondly, the Ordnance maps, serving as an index to the district maps; thirdly, the district maps, serving as indexes to the different titles—the absolute accuracy of these would be a matter of no moment at all; fourthly, the separate plans of each estate contained in the certificates of title—the accuracy of these would be of no more importance than is the accuracy of a plan on a conveyance at present. The question would always be, “Is the property sufficiently identified?” The registration of a conveyance would not alter its nature—it would still be a conveyance, and nothing more, and its operation would still be determined by the ordinary rules of construction. Many copies of the district or index map would be kept in the office; the different estates, as they came in to be registered, would be marked down on one or more of them; and as new assurances came in, subdividing or uniting former holdings, the proper alterations would be made in the index map, but no new Government survey would be made. Thus, with the exception of the survey necessary to supply any deficiencies in the existing maps, no Government survey would be necessary at all, and the burthen upon individuals would be simply the necessity of applying to the Tithe-office for a map on which to point out the property to be registered; or if that could not be procured, and no private map were at hand, of having a survey made at the cost of about 1*s.* an acre. The benefit would be the substitution of the accuracy of a map for the vagueness of verbal description. Mr. Goodeve's anticipation of expensive inquiries and disputes incident to getting the land on the register is a dream: no inquiries will be made and no disputes can arise; every one will be free to register any title he pleases. If two conflicting titles are registered, a certificate of that last registered, and the office index to each, will convey notice of the other.]

When all is done, the necessity of investigation will, for a period of forty or sixty years from the establishment of the register, remain as before. [This is no more than saying, when an acorn is sown, that it will be fifty years before it is well grown. In the meantime, however, there will be certain thinnings. We need not state the writer's objections to a system of judicial investigation and warranty of title, because that scheme does not come recommended with any weight of authority or argument.]

In case of the death of a sole registered owner, the facts of death, and testacy or intestacy, and in the latter case the title of the heir, and in the former the construction and validity of the gift under which the devisee claims, must be ascertained judicially—either by the registrar or by an ordinary Court—unless, indeed, the executor or administrator be constituted a real representative. Cases of lunacy, absence beyond seas, bankruptcy, and insolvency would require special procedure. [There must undoubtedly be provision for executors or administrators real. We are unable to see how the difficulties now occasioned by lunacy, absence beyond seas, &c. will be increased by a registry of title. We understand how they may be diminished by it in many cases.]

To the cost of the map and establishment of claim in the first instance (estimated at from 3,000,000*l.* to 4,000,000*l.*!) must be added that of the decennial revision of the map, and that of the buildings and staff which must be established in various districts.

Unregistered interests will not be protected by conveying notice to those who deal with the registered owner. Their protection will be provided for by caveats. The removal of these caveats will involve expense and difficulties. Either the registrar must have judicial authority, or subsequent purchasers must be left to ascertain that the caveat has been removed by proper authority. [This is a mistake. The instances of caveats for the protection of mortgagees and lessees given by Mr. Goodeve shew that he, in common with all the other objectors to Mr. Wilson's plan that we have yet met with, has not even taken the trouble to read Mr. Wilson's explanation of it.] Caveats would be lodged on every dealing with the estate not requiring a transfer on the register. The result would be—cost in placing and removing the caveats, and trouble and cost in investigating a title complicated with caveats. [Caveats would never be lodged where there was confidence in the registered trustees. Mortgages and leases would appear on the register. Any person would be at liberty to lodge a caveat; this would entitle him to notice of any dealing by the registered owner, and during a short time from the service of that notice he would have the opportunity of establishing his title against a purchaser. A person lodging a caveat, and satisfying the registrar of his title, would be entitled to "full notice," which would give him a period of several years within which to establish his right. The title under the caveat would be represented by a certificate, and be dealt with in all respects as a registered title. The removal of the caveat would therefore not involve any inquiry or delay.]

Next as to the cost of the transfer. The only case in which the transfer would be simple and inexpensive is the case of an absolute sale by an absolute owner; in other cases an auxiliary deed will be required. It is conceded that the expense of covenants for the production of title deeds would be saved in many cases; but these are not the most usual cases; and against the expense of getting in outstanding estates under the present system must be set off the expense of getting in the registered title when that is not the beneficial one. As to the actual instrument of conveyance, the length and cost of that under the present system is frequently an abuse rather than a necessity. The scheme should be considered with reference, not to a simple sale exclusively, but to all the various dealings to which land is subject. [The additional expense occasioned by the register need not exceed 1*l.*; the saving on sales and mortgages would ultimately be from four to ten per cent. of the value of the estate on each sale or mortgage.]

Even granting a balance of gain, are there no drawbacks? The change is not called for on the ground of any insecurity attending the present system; and the uncertainty and consequent insecurity involved in any organic change in the system of title to property are a sound and weighty objection to it. Prima facie, the separation of the apparent from the real ownership appears to involve risk. The history of settlements of stock shews the danger. The security which now attends settled estates, though subject to powers of sale, will disappear when the consent of beneficiaries, the publicity of auctions, the intervention of solicitors, and the delay of investigating the title are no longer necessary. [Two instances of fraud are given, the relevancy of which we do not perceive.] Forgery is another source of danger. Caveats may miscarry. There must be either a separate caveat for each interest, (which would often be neglected), or a general caveat for the whole settlement, which is contrary to the principle of the measure. [Vague suggestions of danger are unanswerable. Mr. Wilson has shewn how forgery may be effectually guarded against. Caveats are not more liable to failure than conveyances, and they are not likely to be very numerous. Settled lands will generally be intrusted, as they now are, to trustees. If these are intended to be inalienable before the settlement ceases, they may be made so by lodging a distringas, to be removed on proof of the applicant's title before the registrar or a judge.]

The system must be compulsory: every estate in the kingdom must be surveyed and put upon the register: not a lease could be granted without resort to the registered owner. Suppose he is not forthcoming when wanted? Why compel the beneficial owner to resort to his trustee on every occasion? Will trustees always be found? [Trustees will be neither more nor less numerous under the proposed than under the existing system, and the difficulties occasioned by the separation of the legal and beneficial dominion will be the same. The tenant for life, with a leasing power, may take a power of attorney from his trustees.]

Mr. Goodeve is a practical man, has had much experience, and is plainly very anxious to make out a case against the proposed register. If the worst he can substantiate against it is, that it will not benefit certain large landowners, but rather add a few shillings to the expense of the settlement, the advocates of the measure may be well satisfied with Mr. Goodeve's letter.

THE LAW OF BLOCKADE.

(Concluded from p. 78).

"The treaty of Ghent, concluded in 1814, established peace between Great Britain and America; but it is worthy of remark, that in that treaty no allusion is made to the maxim, so firmly maintained by the United States, that 'free ship makes free goods,' nor did it allude to the disputed right of search for British seamen on board American vessels.

"General peace was established throughout Europe in 1815; but the several treaties consequent thereon concluded between the different Governments of Europe do not contain any new provisions or arrangements with respect to maritime commerce, nor do any of them revive any such conditions as might have been annulled or suspended by treaties or active hostilities. Thus England was left to carry out in any future war her former recognised principles of international maritime law with as much rigour or stringency as she had hitherto done, or to relax or abandon them, as best suited her feelings, her policy, or her interest.

"This brief historical sketch brings me to the Orders in Council recently promulgated by the English Government, and the results or effects of them.

"The words of one Order in Council, dated the 28th March, 1854, and which bear on the present subject, are—'To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction, her Majesty is willing for the present to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the law of nations. It is impossible for her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, and of preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's despatches, and she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force against the enemy's forts, harbours, or coasts. But her Majesty will waive the right of seizing enemy's property, laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war. It is not her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property, not being contraband of war, found on board enemies' ships; and her Majesty further declares, that being anxious to lessen as much as possible the evils of war, and to restrict its operations to the regularly organised forces of the country, it is not her present intention to issue letters of marque for the commissioning of privateers.'

"Such is the mild language of the hostile policy of the present day. I need scarcely add, that both in practice and theory an important change has been introduced into the exercise of our national belligerent rights. The flag of the neutral now covers and protects the property of the enemy—a maxim never before publicly avowed by Great Britain, except under special treaty. The property of a neutral is also declared inviolable even on board an enemy's ship. That, however, in itself, is no new expression of regard on the part of this country towards neutral property. In deference to the several writers on international law, and in compliance with the decisions of our courts of justice, we have resolutely opposed the doctrine of 'enemies' ships enemies' goods.' France, however, has, on the other hand, as steadily maintained it. And thus we have two maritime nations, foremost in the path of civilisation, each adopting a rule of international law directly at variance with each other—an instance, and by no means a solitary one, of the uncertainty and flexible elements which compose, or are supposed to compose, the law of nations. In our present alliance with France it became absolutely necessary that there should be uniformity of action respecting the exercise of belligerent rights; and thus the French Government has relinquished her claim to pronounce as liable to seizure the property of a neutral on board an enemy's ship; and England, on the other hand, has disclaimed her right to seize the enemy's property on board a neutral vessel. In further aid of these relaxations, it has been determined by both nations to grant no letters of marque.

"I now proceed to shew, as far as I am able, the effect of these Orders in Council, as evinced in the number, value, and tonnage of vessels captured by her Majesty's ships and the officers of the Crown, and condemned by a decree of the Admiralty Prize Court to be sold for the benefit of the captors.

"Another important Order followed, dated the 15th April, which declared, 'that all vessels under a neutral or friendly flag, being neutral or friendly property, should be permitted to import into any port or place in her Majesty's dominions all goods and merchandise whatsoever, to whomsoever the same might belong, and to export in like manner, to any port not blockaded, any cargo or goods not being contraband of war, or not requiring a special permission.'

"This Order directly justifies traffic with the enemy, both as regards British and neutral traders; but practically the British trader is excluded, by reason of the fear of capture of his vessel if it enter the port of his enemy; and thus it is only by blockading the enemy's port that the British merchant can be put on the same footing as the neutral. Since the commencement of hostilities with Russia up to the 1st January, 1855, ninety-two vessels have been captured: of these, forty-nine have been condemned and sold as the property of the enemy.

"By allowing the neutral flag to protect the enemy's property it became necessary to resort to the blockade. The only method by which, under the recent relaxation of belligerent rights, unrestricted traffic in our enemy's produce could be prevented was by stopping its exit from his ports. This could be only effected through the operation of a blockade. This is neither the time nor place to define or quote authorities to shew what amounts to a legal blockade; but I may, I trust, be permitted to say, that a blockade is oftentimes wholly nugatory, both in law and practice. International legists tell us that the legality of a blockade depends upon the means of enforcing it with effect; which is something like saying, that an offender is legally a prisoner to him only who is strong enough to secure him. The due notification, also, of the existence of a blockade, and a knowledge or presumptive knowledge of its existence on the part of those who violate it, is necessary to render them amenable to capture for their act.

"An intricate and difficult question, involving proof of these facts, with reference to our blockade in the Baltic, is now pending before the English Prize Court, in which, virtually, the conflicting parties are the Danish and English Governments.

"The inferences that I would draw from these remarks are—

"1. That the loss consequent on the confiscation of Russian vessels and their cargoes has not affected that nation at large, but that the loss has chiefly fallen on a comparatively poor and insignificant portion of the population, and that the nobles and the higher classes are not yet sufferers thereby; and that there is therefore no influence to bear upon the will of the Emperor, so as to induce him to seek for peace.

"2. That the blockade of the ports of Russia has not, in the Baltic, prevented the export of her produce, nor the import of such articles as she imperatively requires, but has excited feelings of hostility on the part of the northern neutral powers of Europe towards England, which tends to estrange them from an alliance with her.

"3. That the recent Orders in Council, although abandoning much of that intolerant spirit which has heretofore characterised the exercise of our belligerent rights, might without injury to ourselves advance still further in the path of lenity. That it would be sufficient to blockade our enemy's ports for the purpose of preventing the ingress or egress of the munitions of war and disabling his ships of battle, but that his mercantile vessels should, if wholly engaged in commerce alone, be allowed to pass and repass unmolested.

"In conclusion, I would remark, that the American consul in this country, writing, on the breaking out of the present hostilities, to the Minister for Foreign Affairs in New York, states, that in an interview with the Foreign Minister of this country, the latter said 'that he had found great difficulties in overcoming the practice of England for so many years, and their unvarying judicial decisions; but that modern civilisation required a relaxation in the former rules, and that war should be carried on with as little injury to neutrals as was compatible with the interests and safety of belligerents.' In addition to this, the last message of the President of the United States of America contains language of much import as bearing on this question."

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK: this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorise any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. B. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

"To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—New Edition.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 17. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctus in malitia), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 7, 1855.

A QUESTION of considerable interest in a commercial point of view has been lately decided, not, however, without the dissent of one learned judge, in the Court of Exchequer. The case to which we allude is Gibson and Another v. Sturge and Another, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 259), which decides that freight is payable upon a cargo according to the quantity shipped, and not according to the quantity delivered, where the cargo has increased in bulk during the voyage, and there has been no agreement between the parties upon the subject. The facts were briefly these:—A cargo of wheat had been shipped at Odessa for Gloucester. The material part of the bill of lading was as follows:—"Shipped in The Prompt, now riding at Odessa, and bound for the United Kingdom, 3700 chetworts of wheat in bulk, to be delivered at the port of destination unto A. B. and C. D., or their assignees, paying freight for the goods as per charterparty." By a memorandum in the bill of lading it was declared that the quantity and quality were unknown to the master. The provision in the charterparty as to the freight was, that it was to be according to the London, Baltic, printed rates, which is a certain well-known rate per quarter. The wheat was accepted at Gloucester by the defendants as assignees of the bill of lading, and was measured by the Custom-house authorities. It then measured 2785 quarters, instead of 2664 quarters, (the latter being the amount in quarters of the 3700 chetworts mentioned in the bill of lading, and which was found as a fact to have been the quantity shipped). The plaintiffs claimed freight on the larger quantity.

There was no evidence to shew the cause of the increased bulk, whether it arose from heat, or water, or the bad condition of the wheat when shipped, or from defective stowage, or the negligence of the master and crew during the voyage. There was no evidence of any usage controlling the point in dispute, and it was admitted on all sides that there was not any contract affecting it, either in the bill of lading or the charterparty. Although a similar state of facts must have often existed, it appeared to be a case of the first impression; and there being, therefore, no direct authority upon the subject, the learned judges discussed it upon general grounds of analogy, convenience, and justice. Martin, B., differing from the rest of the Court, was of opinion that freight was payable upon the quantity delivered. His Lordship said—"Freight is to be paid upon the wheat shipped and the wheat delivered. The wheat must be delivered to entitle the plaintiffs to freight; but they have delivered the entire quantity which was shipped. So far as appeared at the trial, every grain of wheat shipped on board at Odessa was delivered to the defendants at Gloucester. . . . It was argued, that the bulk which was delivered beyond the bulk shipped was water, and not wheat; but there was no evidence that any water ever came in contact with the wheat at all, and I believe there are causes which increase the size of grain other than contact with water. . . . The valuable part of the grain is that which produces the flour; but in the grain there is the husk, and I believe always a certain quantity of moisture or water, which can only be removed by kiln or artificial drying. . . . The circumstance of the wheat being damaged does not at all affect the right of the plaintiffs to freight. It has been decided, that where the entire quantity was delivered the shipowner was entitled to the full freight, notwithstanding it was proved that the goods conveyed had been damaged by the negligence of the captain and crew, and that the remedy for the merchant was by a cross action for negligence. (Davidson v. Gwynne, 12 East, 381)." The learned judge then rested his judgment upon the following grounds—first, it was just and reasonable that the measurement of the largest space occupied by the cargo during the voyage should be the test for ascertaining the payment of freight; secondly, by analogy to the case above stated, that freight is payable upon the delivery of the entire quantity shipped and accepted, irrespective of its condition; and, thirdly, upon the ground of convenience, as it was often impossible to measure the cargo when shipped, (sometimes, as in the principal case, out of barges in an open roadstead), while, upon its arrival in this country, it is by law to be measured under the supervision of the Custom-house authorities. Were the delivery of the cargo and the payment of the freight to be held in suspense until a communication could be made to Odessa, in order to ascertain whether the quantity mentioned in the bill of lading was correct? If, on the one hand, the making the freight payable on the quantity delivered would hold out a temptation to shipmasters to wet the cargo, and so increase its bulk; on the other, a contrary rule would enable a dishonest consignee to delay the payment of freight, which he might be desirous of doing when the article on its arrival was low in the market.

The other learned judges, (Pollock, C. B., and Alderson and Platt, BB.), however, held that the shipment was to determine the amount payable as freight. The definition of "freight," they said, was the price payable for the carriage of goods from the port of loading to the port of discharge; it was not earned unless they were carried from the beginning to the end of the voyage; and the increase in bulk of this cargo arose ex confesso after the shipment. The case was analogous to that of the pregnant females mentioned in Molloy, (1 De Jure Maritimo, 374, 9th ed.), where no freight is payable for the infants of which they are delivered during the voyage; so, where animals have been shipped, and some die during the voyage, freight is payable only for those which arrive; and again, where goods, as in the case of molasses, have wasted in bulk during the voyage, freight is payable only for the residue.

These admitted cases could be explained only on the ground that freight was to be calculated and paid on that amount only which was put on board, carried throughout the whole voyage, and delivered at the end to the merchant.

It is the duty of the master to ascertain the quantity he receives at the time of loading, and this may be done without difficulty, as he must be aware of the number of cubic feet which his vessel is competent to afford to the stowage of grain, and the cubic bulk of such a commodity as grain when stowed.

There was not a real, but only an apparent increase in the commodity; it may be that during the last two or three days of the voyage the wheat imbibed a quantity of water, which made it occupy a larger space, and the shipowners claim freight for the water so imbibed, as well as for the wheat that was shipped and carried the whole voyage; if the water could be separated, the defendants would be entitled to reject it, and be liable for freight only on the wheat freed from this injurious addition. Suppose a cargo of sponge shipped dry, and to be paid for by weight at the end of the voyage, the consignee might surely squeeze out all the water imbibed during the voyage, and pay for sponge only. The mere difficulty of separation cannot, however, affect the question. "It is manifest," said Pollock, C. B., "that a cargo of wheat may be increased in bulk (and to the great injury of the cargo) by the fraud or negligence of the captain and crew; and I think that laws ought to be framed, and the decisions of Courts of law (as far as possible) ought to be founded, on the same principles as prevail in the moral government of the universe—that, as far as possible, duty and interest should not be opposed to each other. I think it would be dangerous and mischievous to give a shipowner a right to charge more freight for an injurious alteration in the commodity carried, which he or his agents have always the means in their own hands of producing."

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Law of Letters-patent for the sole Use of Inventions in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, including the Practice connected with the Grant. To which is added a Summary of the Patent Laws in force in the principal Foreign States, with an Appendix of Statutes, Rules, Practical Forms, &c. By JOHN CORYTON, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. [H. Sweet, 1855.]

THE law of patents, after having continued unaltered from the passing of the Statute of Monopolies to the year 1834, has of late years been the subject of much learned and scientific discussion, which has led to great difference of opinion; some able authorities having even gone so far as to assert that the entire system is wrong in principle, and positively injurious to those whom it is intended to benefit. We have already discussed this interesting question at some length, (16 Jur., part 2, p. 102); but while we maintain the principle of patent monopolies to be in the main right, we do not dispute that the law still requires considerable amendment, not only in the practice connected with the grant, but in the application of the principle itself.

The importance to a commercial nation of settling on a right basis the office of Government with respect to trade, and the unsatisfactory state of the existing law of patents, render any suggestions for the improvement of the latter of great interest to the public. Mr. Coryton has ably discussed, in an introductory chapter, the chief questions connected with the policy of patents, and the defects of the present law, making some useful suggestions for its improvement. We recommend the perusal of this chapter to every person interested in patents, as the observations it contains evidently proceed from a careful thinker.

In expounding the principles of the existing law of patents, Mr. Coryton has treated the subject in a manner materially differing from that of former writers.

"Hitherto," says the author, "this subject has been treated as a branch of royal franchises conferred through the instrumentality of letters-patent, at the mere motion of the Crown, the grant in this instance flowing from it in its character of patron of industry, ingenuity, and skill.

"An entirely different hypothesis has been here assumed to underlie the structure of patent law—one which admits of its leading questions being discussed on broad general principles, instead of by reference to rules framed for purposes alien to inventions, and but imperfectly applicable to the contingencies of modern trade. It places the grant on the footing of a privilege, resulting from a contract in restraint of trade, between the Crown (as representative of the public) and the patentee, and considers its de facto character as a royal grant to influence the question (as will be seen by the decided cases) to a very inconsiderable extent.

"If simplicity of arrangement be any criterion of the true solution, the supposition here proceeded on would appear to be of solid foundation. Referred to it, the 'subject-matter,' (or 'invention,' the terms being interchangeable), elsewhere so minutely yet variously described, admits of a definition at once comprehensive and concise—as 'the material result of an unpublished improvement in the manufacture of articles for public use.' It is this which forms the leading feature in the scheme. The person of the patentee becomes in comparison with it a subordinate idea—as 'the first publisher by means of a specification of the invention.' It furnishes, moreover, the key to the questions which have arisen on the sufficiency of the specification and other points, and which, as hither discussed, can hardly be said to have been satisfactorily disposed of.

"The theory is no new one. As the compromise of a great contest between sovereign and people, the law was settled, on the issue of that contest, with regard to the great principles it involved—principles which, with scarcely any exceptions, have regulated the administration of the grant from the passing of the Statute of Monopolies to the present day."

The advantage to patentees from considering questions relating to patents upon this hypothesis (which appears to us the correct one) is obvious, as it tends to remove some of the antiquated opinions which have operated to the injury of owners of patents, and it is with pleasure that we remark the adoption by modern judges of more liberal principles in deciding the cases which are brought before them. (See p. 39).

The practical part of Mr. Coryton's book will, we think, find favour with the public on account of the simplicity of its arrangement, and the clearness with which the law is stated. The second chapter, on the subject-matter of a patent, is particularly worthy of notice. Most of the recent cases are referred to, and the alterations effected by the last statute (15 & 16 Vict. c. 83) are, with some slight exceptions, carefully noticed. The last chapter, containing concise notices of the law of patents in every foreign state of importance, is novel, and probably not the least useful part of the work. The clear and untechnical style in which Mr. Coryton's book is written, and the practical suggestions contained in it, make it one which may be consulted with advantage as well by the inventor as the lawyer.

A Treatise on the Law of Costs in Actions and other Proceedings in the Courts of Common Law at Westminster. By JOHN GRAY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. [Lumley, 1854.]

Costs form a considerable item in the results of an action, and are often the principal, sometimes the only, object of litigation. Questions connected with them occur at every stage of the suit—questions frequently of a subtle and complicated character, which must be considered and solved by the practitioner. There are costs interlocutory and costs final, the general costs of the cause and the costs of specific issues; which, again, are subdivided into the costs of distributive issues. There is the power of depriving of costs altogether, and the power of giving them by certificate or order, under the County Courts Acts. Such are only some of the numerous forms in which this subject presents itself. Notwithstanding the constant necessity of referring to this branch of our law, no distinct treatise had been published upon it since the work of Mr. Baron Hullock, some forty years ago, until the appearance of Mr. Gray's book. It might be supposed, a priori, that "costs," however interesting to attorneys and a large portion of their clients, would make but a dry sort of book—a compilation of statutes, rules of court, and cases, without affording much opportunity for logical arrangement, or for the deduction of general rules. Far different, however, is the result under the skilful treatment of Mr. Gray, who has reduced the "chaotic mass" into order, and, by the aid of great industry and learning, has sought out the principles upon which the decisions on the subject ought to rest, reconciling and discarding as authorities those cases and dicta which conflict with or deviate from such principles. In his own words, "it must not be imagined that questions of costs are decided upon mere abstract arbitrary provisions, without reference to general principles. Formerly, indeed, principles were in some degree lost sight of, and considerable confusion was caused by the conflicting and erroneous decisions which ensued; but the Courts of late years, assisted by the Legislature, have done much to restore order and congruity. An endeavour has been accordingly made to give this work a character for something more than a repository of statutes and cases, by keeping principles ever in view; and while placing the foundation of the decisions of the Courts in an intelligible light, pointing out unreservedly where those principles appear to have been departed from." (Pref., p. iv).

The learned author has succeeded in his endeavour, and has also set an example of the spirit in which treatises upon legal subjects should be conceived and executed. We have said that points of some nicety are not unfrequently raised with regard to costs. As an illustration, we may refer to a series of decisions tending to shew that a plaintiff is sometimes better off by not recovering any damages than by recovering some damages; that is, by failing altogether than by success. Thus, the statutes passed with a view of preventing frivolous actions, enact that a plaintiff shall not be entitled to any costs if he recover by verdict less damages than a certain sum—e. g. 40s. (3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2). Where, therefore, in an action of libel, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and several pleas of justification, and the plaintiff recovered a verdict upon all the issues, damages three farthings, it was held that he was not entitled to any costs. (Newson v. Rowe, 1 C. B. 187; Sharland v. Loaring, 1 Exch. 375). But where one of the issues, going to the whole cause of action, was found against him, and so no damages were assessed, he was held entitled to the costs of the other issues which were found for him. (Skinner v. Skopper, 6 Bing. N. C. 131). The action in the latter case was for slander, to which were pleaded a plea of not guilty and a justification; at the trial a verdict was found for the defendant on not guilty, but for the plaintiff on the justification. Tindal, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said—"The statute intended only to provide for the case of frivolous actions of slander, where the jury, after hearing the merits, have decided affirmatively, by their verdict, that the plaintiff is entitled to less damages than 40s. on account of the words spoken. In this case, however, the jury have made no estimate at all of the damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's excuse for speaking the words; so that it cannot be said that the damages might not far exceed the sum of 40s., if that question had come before the jury."

"With respect to the apparent anomaly," says Mr. Gray, (p. 23), "assumed to be caused by the stat. '3 & 4 Vict., namely, of placing an unsuccessful plaintiff in a better position than a successful one, it may be observed, that the statute has not, in fact, any such general effect, for it is only under a particular state of circumstances that an unsuccessful plaintiff would be in a better position than if he succeeded in obtaining damages under 40s.; for it must not be forgotten, that if unsuccessful, he is liable to the general costs of the cause. For example, in the case of Newton v. Rowe, (1 C. B. 187), it is incorrect to assume that the plaintiff would have been better off if the defendant had obtained a verdict on the plea of 'not guilty; for in that case the plaintiff would have had to pay the general costs of the cause, which in ordinary cases would outweigh the costs of the issues found for him."

As an illustration of Mr. Gray's method of treating the various branches of his subject, we may refer especially to his chapter on security for costs. (Chap. 32, p. 324). Almost all the decisions upon this head are shewn to range themselves under two principal classes—namely, first, where the plaintiff resides abroad; and, secondly, where he is in insolvent circumstances, and is suing as the mere nominee or for the benefit of a third party.

There are numerous exceptions and distinctions ingrafted upon this fruitful stem*; for instance, reference to arbitration upon the usual terms; award for a sum less than 20l.; costs of the cause will be taxed upon the lower scale, but costs of the reference upon the higher. (Holland v. Vincent, 9 Exch. 274). The City of London Small Debts Act, being different in its provisions from the General Small Debts Act, has produced corresponding distinctions in the cases which have proceeded upon the two. (See Chaplin v. Long, 9 Exch. 673; Borradale v. Nelson, 14 C. B. 655; Cas- trique v. Page, 13 C. B. 458).

Mr. Gray's book comprehends not only the subject of costs in an action, with its numerous ramifications, but also costs on awards, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, indictments, and other proceedings removed by certiorari, criminal information, and of rules and motions. He also treats of the taxation of costs, of setting off and deducting costs of issues, and of the modes of recovering costs.

It should also be mentioned that the law relating to costs, under the County Courts Acts and the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, is fully discussed in the pages now under review.

We can with pleasure recommend Mr. Gray's work as a very able treatise upon a subject of great practical utility.

* Parson the expression: we do but follow Lord Coke, soaring from the low regions of law to the nebula of fancy.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The case of Russell v. Mc'ulloch, reported in one of your recent numbers, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 157), induces me to call the attention of your readers to the extremely anomalous state of the law with reference to the point raised in that case—the effect, namely, of a judgment, as a charge upon a charge, giving a mortgagee's or chargee's judgment creditor an equitable lien upon the land in mortgage, or subject to the original charge.

Now, the words of the corresponding Irish act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, ss. 19, 22) are precisely the same as those of the English act, (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 11, 13), even to the extent of including copyholds, although the statute is confined to Ireland. But the same point as to the lien upon a mortgagee's or chargee's interest in the land in mortgage, or subject to the charge, having arisen there, it was thought worth while to pass a declaratory act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 29, s. 12) to negative the interpretation contended for, so far as Ireland is concerned, but leaving the English act untouched, although it must have been obvious that the same question would come, sooner or later, to be raised here, and thus leading to the absurd result, that the Legislature has declared the same words to mean one thing in Ireland, which the judicature in England has declared to mean the very reverse here. Will some one get a declaratory act passed to extend the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29, s. 12, to England, and let us have a consistent interpretation of the same words?

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

C. B.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Trinity Educational Term by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Public Lectures to be delivered by the Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History will comprise the following subjects:—

Close of the Reign of William III—Improvements in the Constitution during that period—Law of Treason—Law of the Press—Exclusion of Placemen from Parliament—Independence of the Judges—Triennial Act—Condition of the Dissenters—Parliamentary Inquiries into the Mismanagement of Military Affairs from the time of William to the close of the American War—Place Bill of 1743—Secret Corruption—Aylesbury Election—Kentish Petition—Termination of the direct Struggle between the Crown and the House of Commons—Renewal of the Contest under the Administration of Lord Bute—Increased Power of the Middle Class—Reigns of the Tudors—Progress of the Constitution during the Reign of Elizabeth—Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity—Statute of 1562—Persecution of Puritans and Catholics—Views, Character, and Eloquence of Cartwright—Reasons why his Writings have been neglected—Protection of the Subject's Liberty—Privileges of the House of Commons—Influence of that body at the Accession of James I, compared with its Influence at the Accession of Henry VII—Reasons why there is no good History of England since the Revolution.

In his Private Lectures the Reader will pursue the History of England to the Death of William III, and from that period to the Accession of George III. He will then return to the Reign of Henry VII. It will be his object to illustrate the subject by referring to the law and history of other countries.

Books:—Millar's View of the English Constitution—Hallam's chapters on William III, George I and II, and chapter on the Reign of Elizabeth—Parliamentary History, vols. 1 and 5—Tindal's or Belsham's William III, George I, and George II—Foster's Crown Law—Blackstone, vol. 4—Rapin's History of Elizabeth.

The Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History will deliver his Public Lectures in Lincoln's Inn Hall on Wednesday in each week during the Educational Term, commencing at two p.m.; the first Lecture to be delivered on the 18th April. The Reader will receive his Private Classes on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings in each week, at half-past nine o'clock, in the Benchers' Reading Room.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to give, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Twelve Lectures upon the following subjects:—

I. On Equitable Presumptions.

1. Presumptions which arise from an act being done apparently in discharge of an obligation. Presumed performance of covenants to settle. Satisfaction of debts by legacies.

2. Presumptions arising from the similarity of two gifts. Legacies substitutional or cumulative. Against double portions.

3. Presumption arising from the inconsistency of several claims. Election.

4. Presumptions derived from the nature of a transaction which control the effect of written instruments. Obligations joint in form treated as several. Resulting trusts.

II. On the Jurisdiction of Equity in Matters of Account.

III. On Partnership.

IV. On the Administration of Assets.

V. On marshalling Assets and Securities.

VI. On the Jurisdiction of Equity in Transactions which are affected with Illegality; which are contrary to Public Policy; in cases of Fraud, Unfair Advantage.

In his Private Classes, the Reader on Equity will explain and illustrate the various heads of Equitable Jurisdiction depending upon Superiority of Procedure, as well as the Leading Rules of Practice and Pleading adopted by the Court of Chancery.

The Reader will deliver his Public Lectures in Lincoln's Inn Hall on Thursday in each week during the Educational Term, commencing at two o'clock p.m.; the first Lecture to be delivered on the 19th April. The Reader will receive his Private Classes on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings in each week, from seven to nine o'clock, in the Benchers' Reading Room.

LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, &c.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property, &c. proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Twelve Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

I. The Testamentary Power of Disposition, and the Rules of Construction established by the late Statute of Wills.—The extent of the Testamentary Power previous to the passing of the 1 Vict. c. 26; Effect of the Statute; Enlargement of the Testamentary Dominion, sects. 1, 3, 24; Execution and Attestation, sect. 9; Revocation, sects. 18, 23; Revocation by Inconsistency of Disposition; Positive Rules of Construction established by the Statute, sects. 24, 33.

II. Conveyances by Tenants in Tail and Married Women.—Operation of Fines and Recoveries under the old Law, as ordinary modes of Assurance, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74; Abolitions effected by the Act, sects. 2, 14, 17; Alienation by Tenant in Tail of Freeholds, sects. 16, 18, 21, 39; Office of Protector to the Settlement, sects. 22, 37; Alienation by Tenant in Tail of Copyholds, sects. 50, 54; Disentailing of Entailed Money, sects. 70, 72; Alienation by Married Women, sects. 77, 91.

III. The Law of Dower and Jointure.—Difference between Dower at the Common Law, and Jointure under the Statute of Uses; Legal and Equitable Jointures; Bar of Dower under the old Law; Effect of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106; When a Widow will be put to her Election.

The Lectures to be delivered to the Private Classes will comprise the following subjects:—With the Senior Class the Reader proposes to discuss the Law of Judgments, Voluntary Conveyances, and Covenants. With the Junior Class, the Power of Alienation possessed by Tenants in Tail and Married Women, the Power of Testamentary Disposition, and the Leading Rules of Interpretation applicable to the Construction of Wills.

The Public Lectures will be delivered at Gray's Inn Hall on Friday in each week, at two p.m.; the first Lecture to be delivered on the 20th April, 1855. The Private Classes will be held in the North Library of Gray's Inn on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings, from a quarter to twelve to a quarter to two o'clock.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes to deliver, in the course of the ensuing Educational Term, Twelve Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

I. On the Departments of International Law which have been especially affected by Roman Jurisprudence.

II. On Obligation and Contract. On Ancient Theories of Contract, and the Principles descended from them to Modern Law.

III. On the Roman Systems of Civil Procedure, and their relation to Modern Pleading.

IV. On the Criminal Jurisprudence of the Romans; its Sources and History.

V. On Property, Possession, and Prescription. The Roman Theories on these subjects, and the durable effects which they have produced on Modern Jurisprudence.

VI. On Conditions and Modes; the views of them adopted by Roman and English Law.

With his Private Classes the Reader proposes to discuss the principal departments of Roman Law, employing the Commentaries of Gaius as his text-book, and commencing with the Law of Persons. On particular days the Classes will read Wheaton's Elements of International Law, and portions of such other treatises on the same subject as may be recommended to them.

The Public Lectures will be delivered in the Middle Temple Hall on Tuesday in each week, at two p.m. The Private Classes will assemble in the Lecture-room in Garden-court on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at seven o'clock p.m.

The first Public Lecture will be delivered on Tuesday, the 17th April.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the Educational Term, commencing on the 15th April, 1855, Twelve Public Lectures on the Law of Torts, or Wrongs Independent of Contract; on Criminal Law; and some of the Rules of Evidence ordinarily applicable in Criminal Proceedings. These subjects will be treated in the following order:—

Lecture I.—Nature of a Tort; wherein it differs from a Contract and from a Crime—Inquiry as to the Classes of Cases in which a Remedy ex Delicto may be applicable.

Lecture II.—Of Torts to the Person and Reputation. Lectures III and IV.—Of Injuries to Property, Real and Personal.

Lecture V.—Of Wrongs which do not directly affect the Person or Property.

Lecture VI.—Introductory View of the Principles of our Criminal Law, and of the Leading Rules of Evidence applied therein.

Lectures VII. and VIII.—On the relative Value of Direct and Circumstantial Evidence; and on the Nature of Legal Presumptions.

Lecture IX.—Inquiry as to the Nature of Crime; the Distinction between a Felony and a Misdemeanour; and the Capacity to commit Crime.

Lectures X.—XII.—The three concluding Lectures of the Course will be devoted to an Examination of some of the ordinary Offences against the Person and against Property, attention being specially directed to the proofs required to insure conviction for the same.

With his Class the Reader on Common Law will trace out the Leading Principles of the Law of Private and of Public Wrongs, illustrating them by constant reference to the most important recent cases, and to the following works:—Smith's Leading Cases; Selwyn's Nisi Prius; Blackstone's (or Stephen's) Commentaries, vols. 3 and 4; Archbold's Criminal Pleading (by Welaby); Greaves's edition of Lord Campbell's Acts; and Wills on Circumstantial Evidence.

The Lectures on Common Law during the ensuing Educational Term will be delivered, and the Private Classes will meet, in the Hall of the Inner Temple, as under:—

The Public Lecture on Monday in each week, at two p.m.; the first Lecture to be delivered on the 16th April.

The Private Class on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings, from a quarter to twelve to a quarter to two o'clock.

By Order of the Council,
(Signed) EDWARD RYAN, Chairman pro tem.
Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn, March 28, 1855.

Note.—The Educational Term commences on the 15th April, and ends on the 31st July, 1855.

The Lectures and Classes will be suspended after Tuesday, the 8th May, to be resumed on and after Wednesday, the 30th May.

 LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future Insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE OF PREMIUM without participation of Profits.

The next Division of Profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all Participating Policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the Profits.

At the several past Divisions of Profits made by this Company, the Reversionary Bonuses added to the Policies from ONE-HALF the Profits amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about One per Cent. per Annum on the sums insured, and the total Bonuses added at the four Septennial Divisions exceeded 776,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Extra Premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their Lives at the Tabular Premiums may have their Lives insured at extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such Policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS of POLICIES.—Written Notices of, received and registered.

Medical fees paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for Policy Stamps.

Notice is hereby given.—That Fire Policies which expire at Lady-Day must be renewed within fifteen days at this Office, or with Mr. SAM'L. No. 1, St. James's-street, (corner of Pall-mall); or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom; otherwise they become void.
 Losses caused by Explosion of Gas are admitted by this Company.

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK; this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorize any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. R. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

* * To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 14, 1855.

OUR attention has been called, by the recent case of Tanner v. Christian, (24 L. J., Q. B., 91), to a class of decisions of considerable practical importance, and somewhat difficult to reconcile. The decisions alluded to are those respecting the personal liability of agents on contracts entered into by them. The principle which is at the root of these cases, viz. “that an agent is not liable on any agreement into which he enters merely in his representative capacity, but that wherever he contracts personally, or pledges his own credit, either by concealing his principal or otherwise, he becomes personally liable on such contract,” is simple and well established. (Thomas v. Edwards, 2 M. & W. 217; Franklyn v. Lamond, 4 C. B. 637; Thompson v. Davenport, 9 B. & Cr. 78; Paterson v. Gandesequi, 15 East, 62). And where an agent contracts in writing in his own name, without naming his principal therein, he cannot relieve himself from his liability, even by shewing that at the time of making the contract the other party knew that he was acting only as an agent in the transaction. (Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 334; Jones v. Littledale, 6 Ad. & El. 496). The difficulty has been, in the application of the above principle to the construction of written contracts in which both the agent and the principal are named, in ascertaining what language in such a contract, or what circumstances attending the making thereof, are sufficient to render the agent personally liable on the contract. In the language of Lord Denman in Harper v. Williams, (4 Q. B. 230), “the judgment in such cases has been arrived at only by an examination of the particular circumstances in each; one decision will scarcely serve as an authority for any other, except in so far as the Court may ascertain from it the weight to be allowed to any particular fact, or form of expression, that may be found in any one of these cases and the one under decision. The object is fairly to ascertain in each case what was the real intention and understanding of the parties.” And for this purpose the Court will look, in the first place, to the language of the agreement, or of the whole correspondence from which the contract is to be gathered, and also the circumstances under which the contract was made*, but not to any subsequent declarations or admissions of the parties, whether verbal or written. (Lewis v. Nicholson, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 1041; 21 L. J., Q. B., 315). One principal test of the liability on such contracts is, whether the act contracted to be performed is to be done by the agent himself or by his principal; and it is clear, that where the contract is by the terms of it to be performed by the agent himself, though for and on behalf of another, the agent is personally liable. This was the ground of the decision in Tanner v. Christian. There, by a written memorandum, purporting to be made between the defendant for and on the part of N. of the first part, and the plaintiff of the second part, the defendant, on the part of N., agreed to let, and the plaintiff agreed to take, certain premises, paying the rent to the defendant, for the use of N.; and it was also agreed that no auction should be had on the premises without the license of the defendant on the part of N., and that the plaintiff should take a lease, and execute a counterpart thereof, when called upon to do so by the defendant on the part of N. The memorandum was signed by the defendant in his own name, without any reference to N. The Court held—whether rightly or not may perhaps be open to question—that, by the terms of the memorandum, all the acts to be done on the part of N., and amongst others the granting of the lease, were to be performed by the defendant himself; and on that ground they held the defendant personally liable on the contract. Lord Campbell, C. J., said, “The defendant is to receive the rent, and he would be the party to whom the counterpart of the lease would be executed; he is the acting party, and signs the agreement, not for and on behalf of N., but in his own name. The fair inference is, that the defendant had the legal estate, and was acting as trustee for N., and by his direction.” And he distinguished the case from Lewis v. Nicholson, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 1041; 21 L. J., Q. B., 311), on the ground that “in that case the defendants were acting merely as solicitors, and were not themselves to do the act contracted for, and therefore the Court decided there was no liability incurred by them.” And per Wightman, J.—“The question is, whether the defendant has so contracted as to render himself personally liable. This must be determined by seeing who is to perform the agreement. Now, from the terms of the agreement, there is no doubt that it is to be performed by the defendant himself.” Crompton, J., also relied on the fact that the memorandum was signed by the defendant in his own name, without any reference to N., and distinguished the case on that ground from Spittle v. Lavender, (5 Moore, 270), where the contract was signed by the defendant in his own name as agent of B.

The following cases will afford some clue to the language which the Courts have considered to import an intention that the agent should himself perform the act contracted for.

In Norton v. Herron (1 R. & M. 220; S. C., 1 Car. & P. 648) the defendant, by an agreement purporting to be made by him on behalf of A., stipulated that he, the defendant, would execute to the plaintiff a lease of certain premises, and signed the agreement in his own name. Best, C. J., held that the defendant was personally liable. And where the defendants, directors of a joint-stock newspaper company, gave a promissory note as follows—“On demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay to L. H. 250*l.* for and on behalf of the Wesleyan Newspaper Association,” and this note was signed by them as “directors,” it was held that the words “we severally promise to pay” must apply to the persons who signed the note, and not to the company, and were equivalent to a promise by each of them personally to pay, and that the defendants were therefore personally liable on the note. Healey v. Storey, (3 Exch. 3); Iveson v. Conington, (1 B. & Cr. 160), in which the language was, that the defendant “personally” undertook and agreed &c.; Ex parte Bentley, (2 Deac. & C. 578), where the words were, “On behalf of F. P., I give you notice that I am ready and hereby offer to allow and pay” &c.; and Harper v. Williams, (4 Q. B. 219), are to the same effect.

In Kennedy v. Gouveia, (3 D. & Ry. 503), where, by a memorandum between the plaintiff of the first part, and the defendant on behalf of M. of the second part, it was witnessed that it was agreed between the said parties, &c., and the defendant signed the agreement in his own name simply, the Court held the defendant liable; for although the memorandum purported in its commencement to be made on behalf of M., yet in the body of it the defendant proceeded to agree for himself personally, and signed it in his own name, and not as agent. Abbott, C. J., observed, “The language of the instrument is, ‘it is agreed between the parties.’ Who are the parties? The plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant, therefore, has made himself personally liable.”

Burrell v. Jones (3 B. & Al. 47) and Hall v. Ashurst (1 Cr. & M. 714) will be found, on examination, to have been decided on the same ground. In the former, the solicitors of the assignees of a bankrupt tenant, upon whose lands a distress had been put by the landlord, gave the following undertaking:—“We, as solicitors to the assignees, undertake to pay the landlord his rent,” &c.; and it was held that the words “as solicitors to” were merely descriptive of the character in which they personally undertook, and were not equivalent to “on behalf of.” Holroyd, J., said, “The import of the instrument is not that the assignees undertake through the medium of the defendants as their solicitors, but that they, the defendants themselves, as solicitors, undertake. If the defendants are not bound, nobody is; for it is clear that the assignees are not bound.” In Hall v. Ashurst the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, “I undertake to bear and pay, on behalf of the London creditors, two-thirds of the expenses incident to certain proceedings;” and the Court took the distinction, that the terms of this undertaking imported not a promise on behalf of the assignees that they would pay, but a promise by the defendants themselves to pay for the assignees; and Lord Lyndhurst, C. B., said, (p. 716), “The undertaking here is not an undertaking on behalf of another person to do an act, but it is an undertaking to do an act on behalf of another person.” And again, (p. 719), “It is a contract by the defendant that he would bear and pay for other persons, not a contract on behalf of other persons to bear and pay.”

Again: where it appears, on the face of the contract, that it could not bind the supposed principal, as in Watson v. Murrell, (1 Car. & P. 307), where the defendant, the attorney for a parish, on an indictment against them for the non-repair of a road, entered into an agreement, whereby, “on the part of the parish, he agreed to pay the costs,” the Court will presume that the contract was intended to bind the agent personally, that being the only reasonable construction of which it is capable; and it was on this ground that Lord Campbell, C. J., distinguished the case of Watson v. Murrell in his judgment in Lewis v. Nicholson. But although the circumstance that the act to be done is to be performed by the agent renders him personally liable, the fact that the act is to be performed by another is not conclusive to shew that the agent is not liable; for the agent, by expressly covenanting or agreeing for himself, and not in the name of his principal, that something shall be done by the principal, may thereby bind himself, and this though he describe himself in the agreement as acting for and on behalf of the principal. (Appleton v. Binks, 5 East, 148). In several cases, in which the terms of the contract were, or were supposed to be, ambiguous, the Courts have relied on the fact that the contract was signed by the agent in his own name simply, without reference to his principal, as shewing an intention to create a personal liability in the agent. (See Kennedy v. Gouveia and Tanner v. Christian). And in Spittle v. Lavender, (5 Moore, 270), the circumstance that the defendant had signed the agreement as agent of B. was considered by the Court to render it open to the construction that the defendant intended not to incur any personal liability.

We will now consider two cases in which it was held that the language used did not shew an intention to bind the agent personally. The first of these is Downman v. Williams, in error, (7 Q. B. 103). The defendant had written to the plaintiff as follows:—"Your bill of costs against J. W., amounting to 53*l*., I undertake to have paid to you.—Pembrey Works. Your bill of charges in this matter, amounting to 52*l*., I also undertake (on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile & Co.) to pay, and will arrange with you the time and mode immediately after the dividend meetings." The Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, held that the defendant was not liable on the undertaking to pay the 52*l*.. Tindal, C. J., delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "As to the first point, the very terms of the letter itself, 'I undertake (on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile & Co.) to pay,' would seem to us, in their natural meaning, to point rather to a promise made by one person as agent for another, than as intended to bind the party speaking in the character of a principal; for, upon the latter supposition, there would appear to be no reason whatever for mentioning the name of the principal. To say the least, however, the expression is capable of bearing this construction; and when contrasted with the form of expression used by the defendant in the part of the same letter immediately preceding, viz. 'Your bill of costs, amounting to 53*l*. 7*s*. 2*d*., I undertake to have paid to you,' the distinction between the two modes of expression strongly confirms the interpretation we think it demanded in itself."

In the other, Lewis v. Nicholson, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 1041), the defendants, who were solicitors to the assignees of Arliss & Tucker, who were bankrupts, wrote to the solicitor of the plaintiff the following letter:—"Re Arliss & Tucker.—Sir,—In consideration of Mr. J. H. L., the plaintiff, for whom you act, consenting to the sale, &c., we hereby, on behalf of the assignees, consent that the net proceeds of the sale shall be paid over to you or your client, to the extent," &c., and signed it in their own names simply. In reply to this letter, the plaintiff's attorney wrote to the defendants:—"Re Arliss & Tucker.—In compliance with the undertaking given by you herein &c., I hereby, on the part of Mr. J. H. L., consent to the sale," &c., and signed the same, describing himself as solicitor to the said J. H. L. The Court, after advert- ing to the circumstance that both the defendants' and the plaintiff's attorney were acting as solicitors in the matter, and that it was clear that the plaintiff's attorney acted only as an agent, and relying on the previous case of Downman v. Williams, held that the defendants were not liable on the contract. They further held, that the circumstances under which the letters containing the contract were written might be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, but that a subsequent correspondence containing admissions by the defendants was inadmissible; and that assuming that the defendants had acted without authority from the assignees, they could not be sued as principals on the contract, but that the proper remedy would be by an action on the case for a false representation of their authority, or by an action on an implied contract for the existence of an authority which they professed to have; and they cited Jenkins v. Hutchinson, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 763; 13 Q. B. 744)*.

It will be observed, on examining the grounds of the judgments in Burrell v. Jones and Hall v. Ashurst, that both those cases are distinguishable from the two cases last cited. It seems difficult, however, to reconcile the conclusion at which the Court arrived in Tanner v. Christian with the principle on which Downman v. Williams and Lewis v. Nicholson were decided. The language may, as was said by the Court, be consistent with the defendant being a trustee; but it appears to be also consistent, to say the least, with his being a mere agent. The language of the memorandum is—"Memorandum of agreement between the defendant, on the part of N." &c.—"The defendant, on the part of N., agrees to let," &c. This language is similar to the words in Downman v. Williams and Lewis v. Nicholson, and is not the same as in Norton v. Herron, on which the Court relied, for in that case the body of the agreement ran—"And, first, the said G. H. (the agent) doth hereby agree to execute a lease," &c. And again, in Tanner v. Christian the Court appear to have relied on the expression, "paying unto the defendant, for the use of N., the yearly rent of 40*l*," as shewing that the rent was not only payable, but reserved to the defendant, and that therefore he would be the party by whom the lease was to be granted. But the whole language of the memorandum appears to point rather to the defendant being the agent of N., and to an agreement to let by N. through the agency of the defendant, reserving the rent to N., but payable to the defendant on his behalf; and that the plaintiff, when called on by the defendant on the part of N., was to take a lease from, and execute a counterpart to, N.; otherwise one is tempted to say, with the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Downman v. Williams, there appears to be no reason whatever for mentioning the name of N. If the defendant was a trustee, the constant introduction before every stipulation of the words "on the part of N." was useless, and altogether superfluous; and it is difficult to see how the defendant could have more carefully guarded against the possibility of being considered otherwise than as an agent of N. The circumstance of the memorandum being signed without reference to the principal cannot, since Downman v. Williams and Lewis v. Nicholson, in both of which the defendants signed in their own names simply, be considered as throwing much light on the intention in a case where the memorandum in its commencement and body purported to be made by the defendant on the part of N. It is clear also that N. might have been bound by such a memorandum.

A FULL abstract of the Solicitor-General's Testamentary Jurisdiction Bill will be found below. It proposes to deal with the subject in a vigorous and we think a satisfactory manner. The whole of the existing jurisdictions are to be abolished, and a testamentary court, consisting of a single judge, (whose place during temporary absence may be supplied by the Master of the Rolls or a Vice-Chancellor), is to have cognisance of all matters and questions testamentary, i. e., as the interpretation clause informs us, "all matters relating to the probate of wills, codicils, appointments by will or writing in the nature of a will, and other testamentary instruments as to personal estate, the grants of administration of the effects of deceased persons, and the establishment of testamentary instruments as to real estate."

The practice of this court is to be assimilated in all respects to that of the Court of Chancery. There is no provision for local courts or offices, but persons residing beyond the London post district may apply for probates and administrations through the Post-office; and the present Commissioners for taking Oaths in Chancery may take affidavits. The probates and administrations are to be advertised and printed, and copies sold.

* See also Polhill v. Walter, (3 B. & Ad. 114).

It is proposed to give to the Court jurisdiction over real estate for testamentary purposes—that is to say, to empower the Court to establish wills of real estate and to appoint a real representative to any deceased person, which representative is to have the same powers of sale, mortgage, and disposition over the real estate of the deceased (other than real estate vested in a trustee or trustees for sale, with power to give discharges) as executors or administrators have over freehold estate. This provision is intended to supply a very pressing want; and in substance it is unexceptionable; but it requires some amendment in detail. Thus it is not clear whether the existence of a mortgagee or trustee for sale, not appointed by the will, would or would not exclude the jurisdiction of the Court; and it is not clear that the mere vacancy of the office of trustee for sale (though capable of being supplied) would not oust the jurisdiction. The case, we think, is one of the many which might much more safely be left to the discretion of the Court than be provided for by strict regulations, which can seldom be framed in terms at once comprehensive and precise. The Legislature may very well trust the Court not to displace the testator's own trustees for sale without sufficient cause.

It is proposed to smother all the questions not actually in course of litigation respecting bona notabilia and jurisdiction, by making valid all void and voidable probates and administrations.

On the whole, the provisions of the bill seem to be simple and complete, and we hope that the very liberal arrangements for compensation which it contains will in their present or in some modified form be accepted with a good grace both by those who demand compensation and by the public, so that this important reform may not be longer delayed.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In the case of The Ostsee, the Supreme Court of Prize have decided that officers of her Majesty's navy detaining neutral ships without sufficient grounds, and under a misapprehension of their duty, are liable to make good the loss and expense their act may have occasioned.

It may be as well to remind our readers that affidavits sworn in and after the approaching Easter Term are to be expressed in the first person, and divided into paragraphs; each paragraph is to be numbered consecutively, and, as nearly as may be, confined to a distinct portion of the subject. No costs are to be allowed for any affidavit, or part of an affidavit, substantially departing from this rule. (Reg. Gen., Mich. Vac., 1854, rule 2). The form will be as follows:—

“In the Queen's Bench.

“Between A. B., plaintiff, and
C. D., defendant.

“1. I, E. F., of &c., make oath and say, that &c.
“2. And I further say, that” &c.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Solicitor-General, Sir George Grey, and Mr. Attorney-General)

To abolish the Jurisdiction of all the Ecclesiastical and Peculiar Courts in England and Wales respecting Wills and Administrations, to establish a distinct Court of Probate and Administration, and otherwise amend the Law in relation to Matters Testamentary.

1. Commencement of act.
2. Interpretation clause.
3. The jurisdiction and authority of all ecclesiastical, royal peculiar, peculiar, manorial, and other courts and persons in England and Wales, now having jurisdiction, power, or authority to grant or revoke probates of wills or letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons, shall absolutely cease and determine, and no jurisdiction or authority in relation to legacies, inventories, and accounts, or the distribution of the estates and effects of deceased persons, or any testamentary cause or matter, or any matter arising out of or connected with the grant of administration, shall belong to or be exercised by any such court or person as aforesaid.

4. All jurisdiction, power, and authority in relation to the granting probate of wills and letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons now vested in or which might be exercised by any court or person in England or Wales, together with complete jurisdiction for the purpose of determining all questions and matters relating to matters testamentary, shall belong to and be vested in her Majesty, and shall be exercised in the name of her Majesty in a court to be called “The Testamentary Court.”

5. The Testamentary Court shall, for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction, power, and authority hereby vested in the same court, have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority of the High Court of Chancery, by statute or otherwise, now exercisable by the Court of Chancery with respect to matters within its jurisdiction, and also all powers and authorities, by statute or otherwise, now exercisable by the Prerogative Court or any other court, or body politic or corporate, or any person whomsoever, exercising or entitled to exercise jurisdiction in relation to matters testamentary.

6. The practice and proceedings in the court, except where otherwise directed by this act, or by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in pursuance of the provisions of this act, shall be similar to the practice and proceedings of the Court of Chancery.

7. The court shall hold its sittings at such place or places in London or Middlesex, or elsewhere, as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

8. It shall be lawful for her Majesty to appoint, by letters-patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, a fit and proper person, being or having been a barrister at law of fifteen years' standing at the least, or an advocate of the Court of Arches of ten years' standing at the least, to be the judge of the court.

9. During the temporary or occasional absence of the judge, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct that the Master of the Rolls, if he shall consent thereto, or any of the Vice-Chancellors, shall act as judge of the court.

10. It shall also be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct that during the temporary or occasional absence of the Master of the Rolls, or any of the Vice-Chancellors, the judge of the court shall act as a judge of the High Court of Chancery.

11. The judge to be appointed under this act shall have the same powers and privileges, as well in the Testamentary Court as in the Court of Chancery, and shall be subject to the same provisions, duties, and observances, as the Vice-Chancellors appointed under an act passed in the 5 Vict. c. 5, and he shall have rank and precedence next after the Vice-Chancellors.

12. He shall have a secretary, usher, and trainbearer, to be from time to time appointed and removed by him at his pleasure; and the secretaries, registrars, and other officers of the Court of Chancery appointed to attend the Lord Chancellor, and the principal registrar, registrars, and other officers of the Testamentary Court appointed under the provisions of this act, shall attend such judge when sitting in court or in chambers, as circumstances shall require, and as the Lord Chancellor shall order or direct.

13. The salary of such judge, and the salaries of his secretary, usher, and trainbearer, shall be of the same amounts, and paid out of the same funds, and in like manner as the salaries of the Vice-Chancellors appointed under the said act of the 5 Vict. c. 5, their secretaries, ushers, and trainbearers, are now payable.

14. Retiring pension. 5 Vict. c. 5.

15. Lord Chancellor may appoint persons to keep order in court.

16. Power to supply vacancies in office of judge appointed under this act.

17. Seal of the court.

18. The principal office of the court, to be called the “Testamentary Office,” shall be established in such place as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint; and until another testamentary office shall be appointed by her Majesty in Council, the present public registry of the Prerogative Court shall be used as the testamentary office.

19. There shall be the following officers of the court; (that is to say)—

One principal registrar;

Five registrars; and

So many principal clerks, assistant clerks, officers, messengers, and servants as the Lord Chancellor, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may from time to time think fit.

20. Power to increase number of registrars and official clerks.

21. The principal registrar and all the other officers of the court, except as hereinafter mentioned, shall be appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

22. Certain present officers of the Prerogative Court to have equivalent offices in the new court.

23. The principal registrar shall, subject to any orders to be made by the Lord Chancellor, have the general superintendence and control of the offices of the court and the officers thereof, and the business transacted in such offices, and at the time of being appointed shall be or have been an advocate of the Court of Arches of ten years' standing, or a barrister-at-law of the like standing, or have served as registrar of the court for a period of five years.

24. No person shall hereafter be appointed registrar or principal clerk to the registrars who shall not be or have been an advocate of the Court of Arches, a barrister-at-law, a proctor in the courts at Doctors' Commons or in some ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, or a solicitor of the Court of Chancery: provided, that any person who at the time of the passing of this act is acting as registrar or deputy registrar of any ecclesiastical court shall be eligible to the office of registrar or principal clerk to the registrars.

25. The principal registrar and registrars shall execute their respective offices in person, and shall hold the same during their good behaviour, subject to be removed by order of the Lord Chancellor for some good and reasonable cause to be in such order expressed; the other officers of the court shall execute their respective offices in person, and not by deputy, and shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the Lord Chancellor.

26. The servants and messengers shall be appointed by the principal registrar, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor.

27. All persons who at the time of the passing of this act are advocates of the Court of Arches shall be entitled to practise as counsel in any of her Majesty's courts of law or equity in England or Wales, in like manner in all respects, and with the same rank and precedence, and the same eligibility to appointments under acts of Parliament or otherwise, as if they had respectively been duly called to the degree of barrister-at-law on the day on which they respectively were admitted as advocates in the said Court of Arches.

28. Every person who at the time of the passing of this act is actually admitted and practising as a proctor and notary in the courts at Doctors' Commons, or any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, may, at any time after the passing of this act, not later than one year thereafter, be admitted as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, upon the production of his admission as such proctor and notary, or an official certificate thereof, and upon the production of an official certificate that such admission continues in force, and upon signing the roll of the Court of Chancery, but not otherwise; and such admission shall entitle such proctor so admitted as a solicitor to be afterwards in like manner admitted, if he shall so think fit, and to be inrolled as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster.

29. Every person who at the time of the passing of this act is actually serving or has served as an articulated clerk to a person entitled to act as a proctor in the courts at Doctors' Commons, or in some ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, and entitled to take such articulated clerk, and who has not been admitted as a proctor, shall be entitled, at any time within one year after his having completed his full term of service as such articulated clerk, to be admitted as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, upon signing the roll of the same court, and with the like privileges as if he had been admitted as a proctor and notary at the time of the passing of this act.

30. All solicitors of the High Court of Chancery shall be solicitors of the court, and all commissioners for taking oaths in the High Court of Chancery shall be commissioners for taking oaths in the court.

31. All the laws and statutes now in force concerning attorneys and solicitors shall extend to solicitors practising in the court.

32. Orders to be drawn up by registrar; office copies, &c.

33. The accountant-general of the Court of Chancery and the taxing masters of the same court shall act as accountant-general and taxing masters of the Testamentary Court.

34. Accountant-general, &c. to act on orders of the court.

35. Appeal to the Lord Chancellor or Court of Appeal in Chancery, and to the House of Lords.

36. Any person desirous of proving any will, or obtaining letters of administration to the effects of any deceased person, is, either personally or through a solicitor, to apply for the same at the testamentary office of the court, and leave or cause to be left in such office the will, if any, of the deceased, (unless the same shall have been previously deposited in the court or the registries thereof, or shall for any other reason be not required to be left), and also a copy of the will, if any, and an affidavit made by the person or some one of the persons applying for such probate or administration, with a schedule thereto, in a form similar to the form set forth in the Schedule (A.) to this act, with such variations as the nature and circumstances of the case may require, and such other papers as may be necessary for the purpose of obtaining such probate or administration.

37. Where the person applying for such probate or administration shall be resident out of the limits of the London district post, such application, together with the documents necessary for the purpose of obtaining such probate or administration; may be addressed and sent through the General Post-office to the principal registrar.

38. The principal registrar shall cause printed forms to be prepared and circulated, containing directions to commissioners for taking oaths in the court as to the inquiries they are to make of persons applying for probate or administration, and printed forms of affidavits, applicable, as far as circumstances will permit, to the different cases likely to arise, in order that such printed forms of affidavits may be filled up and signed, and sworn to by the applicant.

39. If and when the principal registrar shall be satisfied upon any such application as aforesaid, whether made directly at the testamentary office or sent to him through the General Post-office, that the same ought to be granted, he shall signify such satisfaction to the person making such application, and subject to such regulations as may be made by the Lord Chancellor as to the mode of payment of the stamp duty payable by law on such probate or administration, and the fees payable thereon, shall cause such probate or administration to be granted accordingly, and to be delivered or transmitted through the General Post-office to the person making such application as aforesaid, or his solicitor.

40. Form of probate and administration.

41. Probates and administrations to be printed.

42. The principal registrar shall, within such time after the grant of probate or administration as the Lord Chancellor shall by any general order direct, cause a printed copy thereof to be transmitted through the post to each of the following offices or places; (that is to say),

1. The Metropolitan Register Office of Births and Deaths in London;

2. The Office of her Majesty's Prerogative in Dublin;

3. The Office of the Commissary of the County of Midlothian in Edinburgh;

4. The Office of the Registrar of Births and Deaths in the district within which the deceased died, in all cases where the place of his death shall be known to have been within any such district;

5. Such other offices or places, if any, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct.

43. Any printed copy of a will, probate, or administration, to be so transmitted as aforesaid, may be inspected by any person, on payment of a fee of sixpence.

44. The principal registrar shall also retain in the testamentary office so many printed copies of the will or administration as he shall think necessary for inspection and sale, having regard to the nature of the instrument, the amount of the property, and the probable demand for copies thereof.

45. Official printed copies of wills or administrations to be proved or granted after this act shall come into operation shall, so long as any copies retained for sale shall be undisposed of, be issued to any person applying for the same, on payment of such fee as shall be fixed for the same by any order of the Lord Chancellor, to be made as hereinafter mentioned.

46. Every printed copy issued by the principal registrar shall be stamped in such manner as to denote the amount of ad valorem duty which has been paid in respect of such probate or letters of administration.

47. Official written copy of part of a will may nevertheless be obtained.

48. A note containing particulars of every probate or administration to be advertised in London Gazette.

49. Executor or administrator within twelve months to file inventory of effects of deceased.

50. In case of neglect of executor or administrator to file inventory within such period, the court, on application of any person interested, may order same to be filed, with costs.

51. Practice as to caveats in the court to correspond with practice as to caveats in the Prerogative Court.

52. Commissioners for taking oaths to receive and transmit caveats.

53. Instead of citation, summons to be issued by testamentary office, but according to practice of Prerogative Court.

54. Any person having an interest in, and being desirous of, establishing any will of the real estate of any deceased person, or of recalling or revoking any probate or administration which may have been granted through the testamentary office, may institute a suit in the court for the purpose, either by bill or claim, as he may be advised.

55. No demurrer for want of parties, but suit to proceed, if judge think fit.

56. The determination of the court in any such suit, if the court shall think fit so to declare by its decree or order therein, shall bind all persons named or referred to therein by a particular or general description, including persons under disability, whether parties to the suit or not, and persons unborn.

57. Any person named or referred to by any such decree or order as last aforesaid, and purporting to be bound thereby, though not a party to the suit, may have such relief, if any, against the same, by way of rehearing or appeal, or otherwise, as he would have been entitled to in case he had been originally made a party thereto.

58. Existing acts as to sureties in administration bonds repealed.

59. Every person to whom any grant of administration shall be committed shall give bond to the judge of the court for the time being, and, if the court shall so require, with one or more surety or sureties, conditioned for duly collecting, getting in, and administering the personal estate of the deceased, which bond shall be in such form as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any general order direct.

60. Such bond shall be in a penalty of double the amount under which the estate and effects of the deceased shall be sworn, unless the court shall in any case think fit to direct the same to be reduced, in which case it shall be lawful for the court so to do, and also to direct that more bonds than one shall be given, so as to limit the liability of any surety or sureties to such amount as the court shall think reasonable.

61. Power to court to assign bond.

62. Pending testamentary suits (other than appeals to Privy Council) transferred to new court. Saving of present right of appeal to Privy Council.

63. Power to judge of Prerogative Court to deliver written judgments in causes heard before act comes into operation.

64. Where a person has died or shall die wholly intestate as to his personal estate, or leaving a will affecting personal estate, but without having appointed an executor thereof willing and competent to take probate, and it shall appear to the court to be necessary or convenient in any such case to appoint some person to be the administrator of the personal estate of the deceased, other than the person who, if this act had not passed, would by law have been entitled to a grant of administration of such personal estate, it shall not be obligatory upon the court to grant administration of the personal estate of such deceased person to the person who, if this act had not passed, would by law have been entitled to a grant thereof, but it shall be lawful for the court, in its discretion, to appoint such person as the court shall think fit to be such administrator, upon his giving such security (if any) as the court shall direct; and if in the judgment of the court, under the special circumstances of any particular case, it shall be proper or advisable so to do, to appoint as such administrator a person to be under the immediate control of and immediately accountable to the court, and to allow to such person such remuneration out of the estate as the court shall think fit.

65. Administration pendente lite.

66. It shall be lawful for the court to appoint a receiver of the real estate of any deceased person pending any suit in the court touching the validity of any will of such deceased person.

67. Remuneration to administrators and receivers pendente lite.

68. After grant of administration, no person to have power to sue as an executor.

69. Revocation or determination of temporary grants not to prejudice actions or suits.

70. The court shall have the same or the like power and control over all wills and testamentary instruments, and over all papers or writings purporting to be testamentary, as the Prerogative Court now has or can exercise with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the same court.

71. Court may remove from registry or cancel a forged will, or restore a will which has been tampered with.

72. It shall be lawful for the court, on motion, petition, or otherwise, in a summary way, whether any suit shall be depending in the court with respect to any probate or administration or not, to order any person to produce and bring into the testamentary office of the court, or otherwise as the court may direct, any paper or writing, being or purporting to be testamentary, which may be shewn to be in the possession or under the control of such person; and if it shall not be shewn that any such paper or writing is in the possession or under the control of such person, but it shall appear that there are reasonable grounds for concluding that he has the knowledge of any such paper or writing, it shall be lawful for the court to direct such person to be examined upon interrogatories respecting the same, and such person shall be bound to answer such interrogatories, and, if so ordered, to produce and bring in such paper or writing, and shall be subject to the like process of contempt in case of default in not answering such interrogatories, or not producing or bringing in such paper or writing, as he would have been subject to in case he had been a party to a suit in the court, and had made such default as aforesaid; and the costs of all such proceedings and of such production as aforesaid shall be in the discretion of the court.

73. Court may direct validity of a will to be tried by jury.

74. Attesting witnesses to will may be examined at discretion of court. Costs.

75. It shall be lawful for any person interested in the real estate of any deceased person, whether such person shall have died before or after the passing of this act, to apply to the court in any suit, or upon motion or petition, in a summary manner, without bill or claim filed, to appoint some person to be the representative of the real estate of such deceased person, or any part thereof; and the court, if it shall think fit, shall, upon notice of such application to such persons, if any, as it shall think fit, have power to make such appointment as to such real estate only of the deceased as may not be vested in trustees or a trustee in trust for sale, with power to give discharges to purchasers, or over which there shall not be a power of sale exercisable by any trustee or trustees or other person or persons, with a like power of giving discharges to purchasers, or any part of such real estate.

76. Every real representative so to be appointed shall have full power to sell and convey the real estate of the deceased, or so much thereof as shall be comprised in or affected by the order appointing such real representative, and to receive the rents and profits thereof, and to raise money by mortgage of the same, and to give discharges for such purchase and mortgage monies, and rents and profits, and shall apply the money to be received by him for the purposes and in the manner in such order to be expressed, but no purchaser or mortgagee shall be in any manner bound to see to such application.

77. In all suits respecting the real estate comprised in or affected by any order appointing a real representative, the real representative so appointed shall represent such real estate in the same manner and to the same extent as the executor or administrator of any deceased person represents the personal estate of such deceased person.

78. Except where otherwise provided, none of the provisions herein contained with reference to the real estate of deceased persons shall extend to the real estate of persons dying before this act comes into operation.

79. Except as hereinafter provided, no suit or proceeding shall be instituted or taken to revoke or recall any probate of a will or grant of administration, after the expiration of twenty years from the date of such probate or administration.

80. Further period of ten years for disabilities.

81. On allegation of fraud, court may allow suit after time of limitation elapsed.

82. Void and voidable probates and administrations not under litigation to be valid.

83. Power to Lord Chancellor to make rules and regulations.

84. Judges of present ecclesiastical courts and others, at request of principal registrar, to transmit all wills, &c. in their possession, &c. to the record keepers, to be deposited in testamentary office, there to be arranged for reference.

85. Penalty for default.

86. Power to Lord Chancellor to arrange for temporary custody of wills, &c. until same are deposited in testamentary office.

87. Provision for appointment of temporary officers.

88. Power to Lord Chancellor to direct registrars to discharge the duties of principal registrar during vacation, &c.

89. Power to Lord Chancellor to remove any officer appointed under this act engaging in other employment.

90. Proctors, solicitors, &c. appointed to any office under this act to cease to be proctors in the courts at Doctors' Commons, and struck off the rolls, as the case may be.

91. Registrars, &c. to have power to administer oaths.

92. Forging or counterfeiting seal of court or signature of officers. Penalty.

93. This act not to affect the stamp duties on probates and administrations.

94. The registrar to deliver copies of wills, &c. to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

95. Lord Chancellor to prepare table of fees to be taken by officers of court, with power to vary the same as he may think fit, and to publish same in Gazette. No other fees to be taken.

96. No officer to retain for his own use any fees, or accept gratuity. Penalty.

97. Prosecution of offenders.

98. Fees not to be paid in money, but by stamps.

99. So much of the Suits in Chancery Relief Act as applies to the collection of fees by stamps incorporated, except that separate accounts to be kept. Commissioners of Inland Revenue to retain expenses, &c., and pay residue into Bank of England to an account, "The Testamentary Fee Fund Account."

100. Fees to be paid to the same account.

101. Acts relating to stamps under Commissioners of Inland Revenue incorporated.

102. Power to Lord Chancellor to provide offices, &c.

103. Salaries of officers.

104. Power to Lord Chancellor to remove any officer becoming infirm or incapable, and to limit retiring allowance.

105. Mode of compensating retiring officers, &c. Superannuation allowance.

106. And whereas, by the abolition of the present mode of procedure in matters testamentary, the judges and deputy judges, registrars and deputy registrars, and other persons holding office in the ecclesiastical courts, who are lawfully entitled to receive certain salaries or fees payable in respect of the transaction of business in matters testamentary, will be wholly deprived thereof, and it is reasonable and fit that compensation should be made to such persons in respect of such losses: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for every such judge, deputy judge, registrar, deputy registrar, and other person to claim compensation in respect of such salaries and fees from the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within six months from the time when this act shall come into operation; and it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by examination on oath or otherwise, and in such manner as they shall think fit, to inquire into the nature of the office, and what was the tenure, and what was the clear annual amount, on an average of five years immediately preceding the 1st January, 1855, of the lawful salaries and fees in respect of which compensation shall be so claimed, and to require the production of such evidence as they shall think fit;

and the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall have regard to the fact whether such office shall have been exercised jointly or by deputy, in which case any joint holder of the said office, or the person performing the duties of the office by deputy, shall be entitled to make claim in respect of the emoluments actually received by him under or by virtue of any arrangement entered into with the other joint holder, or the deputy, as the case may be; and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall allot to such officers, joint holders of offices, and deputies, and other persons, such sums or annual sums in respect of their several claims respectively, on an average of five years immediately preceding the 1st January, 1855, as to them shall seem just: provided, that in no case shall any such officer, joint holder of an office, or deputy, be entitled to receive any such compensation unless he shall have held such office, joint office, or deputyship for the space of three years immediately preceding the 1st January, 1855; and provided also, that every such officer, joint holder of an office, or deputy, who shall have held such office, joint office, or deputyship for more than three years, but less than six years, immediately preceding the 1st January, 1855, shall be entitled to one-half only of the amount of emolument so enjoyed by him as aforesaid, to be computed on the average of the whole time during which he shall have held such office.

107. And whereas it is apprehended that the fees or emoluments of the persons now practising as proctors in the several ecclesiastical courts will be materially curtailed by the abolition of the exclusive rights and privileges which they have hitherto enjoyed as such proctors in the ecclesiastical courts in matters testamentary: be it enacted, that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by examination on oath or otherwise, which oath they are hereby authorised to administer, may inquire into and ascertain the net annual amount of the profits arising from matters testamentary made by such proctors, (not being solicitors or attorneys), on an average of five years immediately preceding the 1st January, 1854, or of such proportion of five years as shall have elapsed since such proctor was admitted to practise in such courts in respect to matters testamentary, and to award to every such proctor a sum of money or annual payment, during the term of his natural life, of such amount as the said commissioners shall deem to be equitable: provided that such sum of money or annuity so awarded shall not exceed in value one-half of the net profits derived by such proctor in respect of the matters aforesaid, upon the said average of five years immediately preceding the 1st January, 1854, or of such proportion of the said five years as shall have elapsed since the admission of such proctors to practise in the ecclesiastical courts.

108. And whereas divers proctors practising in ecclesiastical courts now are, or may at the time of this act coming into operation be, associated together in partnership: be it therefore enacted, that in all such cases the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall inquire into and ascertain the terms or conditions of such partnerships, and shall award compensation in respect thereof, as hereinbefore provided, to each of such partnerships, in like manner as if all the emoluments thereof had been derived by one individual, and shall apportion such compensation among the members of each such partnership, regard being had to the existing terms and conditions of the same.

109. There shall be awarded to the judge of the Prerogative Court, by way of compensation, an annual sum, equal in amount to the net annual value of the lawful fees and emoluments of his office, according to such an average, prior to the time of this act coming into operation, as the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper, and such annual sum shall be payable to him during his life.

110. Salaries of persons appointed to offices to go in reduction or satisfaction of compensation.

111. Clause for protection of the interests of the Right Hon. Charles Viscount Canterbury.

112. The registry of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury to vest in registrar of the court.

113. Compensation to Rev. R. Moore, for building, to be determined by arbitration.

114. How compensation to be paid.

115. Time of payment of salaries, &c.

116. Power to Lord Chancellor to order surplus of Testamentary Fee Fund to be paid into the Exchequer. If fund insufficient to defray salaries, &c., Commissioners of the Treasury to provide for the same.

117. Probate of will or grant of administration of effects of person dying domiciled in England, Wales, or Ireland, to be valid in Ireland or Scotland. In like manner, probate or administration granted by her Majesty's Prerogative Court in Ireland to be valid in Great Britain. Proviso, that no person transferring any personal estate to any person claiming under any such probate, administration, or confirmation as aforesaid, shall be bound to inquire into the domicile of the deceased, if the fact of such domicile shall be stated on the face of the probate, administration, or confirmation, or be in anywise affected, though the domicile of the deceased may be untruely stated thereon.

118. Short title.

119. This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland, except where expressly mentioned.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

Recently published, in 12mo., price 14s. cloth.

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

SPENCE on the EQUITABLE JURISDICTION of the COURT OF CHANCERY: comprising EQUITABLE ESTATES and INTERESTS; their Nature, Qualities, and Incidents; in which is incorporated, so far as relates to those Subjects, the substance of "MADDOCK'S PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY." By GEORGE SPENCE, Esq., Q.C.

* Vol. 1 may be had, price 1l. 11s. 6d. boards.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the ipsissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate. . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend, could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with whose details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this results the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once trite and recherché, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resumés of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on, the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 21, 1855.

In our last number we drew attention to some recent cases upon the personal liability of agents to be sued upon contracts in which both the principal and agent are named. We propose now to consider under what circumstances persons, who have described themselves in contracts as agents for third persons, may or may not shew themselves to be in fact the real principals, and sue as such. The distinction appears to be between cases in which the plaintiff has described himself as agent for an unnamed principal, and there is nothing to shew that the defendant contracted on the faith of his being such agent only, and would not have contracted with him as principal if he had known him to be so; and those in which the supposed principal is named in the contract. In the former class of cases, the defendant having been unacquainted with the name of the supposed principal, and not having thought it necessary to inquire who he was, it is impossible that he can have been induced to enter into the contract by any reliance on the character, skill, or solvency of the supposed principal; and the mere possibility that the defendant may have been contented to contract with any person as principal, provided it was not the plaintiff, and that he may have relied on the contract as indicating that the plaintiff was an agent only, will not prevent the plaintiff from suing as principal; at least, the Courts will not in such a case assume that the defendant relied on the plaintiff being an agent only, and would not have contracted with him as principal, in the absence of other evidence to that effect. But where the supposed principal is expressly named in the contract, the defendant has a right to the benefit he may have contemplated from the character, skill, or substance of the supposed principal.

The above appears to be the rule by which the Court were guided in their judgment (delivered by Patteson, J., after time taken to consider) in Schmalz v. Avery, (15 Jur., part 1, p. 291; 16 Q. B. 655). There the plaintiff sued for the breach of a charterparty not under seal, purporting to be made "between the defendant, the owner of the ship, &c., of the one part, and the plaintiff, as agent of the freighter, of the other part," and containing a stipulation that "this charter being concluded on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all responsibility on the part of Schmalz & Co." (the plaintiffs) "cease as soon as the cargo is shipped." It appeared in evidence at the trial that the plaintiff was himself the only party interested as freighter; no objection was taken at the trial to the admissibility of this evidence, but at the close of the plaintiff's case it was objected that he was concluded by the terms of the charterparty, and fixed with the character of agent only. Patteson, J., in delivering judgment, said, "It is conceded, that if there had been a third party who was the real freighter, such third party might have sued, although his name was not disclosed in the charterparty." (Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 844; Skinner v. Stocks, 4 B. & Al. 437; Garrett v. Handley, 4 B. & Cr. 664; Cothay v. Pennell, 10 B. & Cr. 671). "But the question is, whether the plaintiff can fill both characters of agent and principal, or rather whether he can repudiate that of agent and adopt that of principal, both characters being referred to in the charterparty, but the name of the principal not being therein mentioned." And after commenting on Bickerton v. Burrell, (5 Mau. & S. 383); Rayner v. Grote, (15 M. & W. 359); and Humble v. Hunter, (12 Q. B. 310; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 1021), proceeded—"A distinction was taken in the argument in the present case, by the defendant's counsel, between an executed and an executory contract; and it was said, that whatever might be the rule in the former class of cases, where the defendant has received the benefit of the contract, and it is probably immaterial to him whom he pays, yet that in the latter class the defendant cannot be held answerable to B., having expressly contracted with A.; and a passage in the judgment of the Court in Rayner v. Grote was much relied on, which is this—'If, indeed, the contract had been wholly unperformed, and one which the plaintiff, by merely proving himself to be the real principal, was seeking to enforce, the question might admit of some doubt. In many cases—such as, for instance, the case of contracts, in which the skill or solvency of the person who is named as the principal may reasonably be considered as a material ingredient in the contract—it is clear that the agent cannot then shew himself to be the real principal, and sue in his own name; and it may be fairly urged that this, in all executory contracts, if wholly unperformed, or if partly performed, without the knowledge of who is the real principal, may be the general rule.' With this passage we entirely agree; but it is clear that it is applicable only to cases where the supposed principal is named in the contract; if he be not named, it is impossible that the other party can have been in any way induced to enter into the contract by any of the reasons suggested. In the present case, the names of the supposed freighters not being inserted, no inducement to enter into the contract, from the supposed solvency of the freighters, can be surmised. Any one who could prove himself to have been the real freighter and principal, whether solvent or not, might most unquestionably have been sued on this charterparty. The defendant cannot have been in any way prejudiced in respect of any supposed reliance on the solvency of the freighter, since the freighter is admitted to have been unknown to him, and he did not think it necessary to inquire who he was. It is, indeed, possible that he may have been contented to take any freighter and principal, provided it was not the present plaintiff; and he may have relied on the terms of the charterparty indicating that the plaintiff was an agent only, being willing to accept of any one else, be he who he might, as principal. After all, therefore, the question is reduced to this—whether we are to assume that the defendant did so rely on the character of the plaintiff as agent only, and would not have contracted with him as principal if he had known him so to be, and are to lay it down as a broad rule, that a person, contracting as agent for an unknown and unnamed principal, is precluded from saying, 'I am myself that principal.' Doubtless his saying so does in some measure contradict the written contract, especially the concluding clause, which says, 'This charterparty being concluded on behalf of another party,' &c.; for there was no such party."

Rayner v. Grote and Bickerton v. Burrell were both cases in which the supposed principal was expressly named. In Rayner v. Grote the plaintiff had made a written contract for the sale of goods to the defendant, in which he described himself as the agent of A., and the defendant had accepted and paid for a portion of the goods, and evidence was given at the trial that the defendant at the time of such acceptance had notice that the plaintiff was the real principal in the transaction, and not the agent of A. Alderson, B., delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "We think that it was properly left to the jury to infer from the evidence, that the defendant, with the full knowledge of the facts, had received a portion of the goods, and that all parties then treated the contract as one made with the plaintiff as the principal in the transaction. . . . The jury must be taken to have found that this contract has been in part performed, and that part performance accepted by the defendant with full knowledge that the plaintiff was not the agent, but the real principal. If so, we think the plaintiff may, after that, very properly say the defendant cannot refuse to complete that contract."

From the portion of the judgment just stated, and the passage cited therefrom by Patteson, J., in his judgment in Schmale v. Avery, it will be seen that the Court inclined to the opinion, that but for the acceptance of part of the goods, with notice that the plaintiff was the real principal, the plaintiff could not have sued; and that the judgment was founded upon the consideration that both parties at the time of the part acceptance treated the contract as one made with the plaintiff as principal, and that what then took place amounted to a new and substituted agreement between the defendant and the plaintiff as principal.

The decision, coupled with the facts of the case, in Bickerton v. Burrell, does not support the general proposition stated in the marginal note thereto; nor does it support the proposition for which the case has been frequently cited, that after notice that he is the real principal, a party who has made a contract, describing himself as an agent for a supposed principal named therein, may sue on such contract as principal. The plaintiff had purchased some ground-rents of the defendant by a written contract, in which he described himself as agent of R., and paid a deposit of 120*l.*, for which he took a receipt, in which the money was stated to have been received from the plaintiff as agent for R. The action was, not to enforce the contract for the purchase of the rents, but to recover back the deposit so paid to the defendant; and it was sought to be shewn that the plaintiff was in fact the real principal in the purchase, and that the money was his, and not R.'s; and although a doubt was expressed by Lord Ellenborough, whether, where a person has described himself as agent to another, whom he names, he could afterwards shift his position, and shew himself to be the real principal, his Lordship decided the case on the ground of the want of any notice to the defendant, before action, of the plaintiff's real character. And Bailey, J., expressly held that the plaintiff might, under the circumstances, by giving notice to the defendant of the real nature of the transaction, and tendering him an indemnity against any claim by R. to the money, have entitled himself to sue. And the whole Court decided against the plaintiff's right to sue as principal, on the ground of the want of any previous notice to the defendant. This decision will be found on examination not to conflict with the principle laid down by Patteson, J., in Schmale v. Avery. The action was not brought to enforce performance of the executory contract made by the plaintiff as agent for R., but appears, as observed by Alderson, B., in Rayner v. Grote, to have been for money had and received, and was, in fact, founded upon a new implied contract arising out of the circumstance that the money received by the defendant was the plaintiff's money; and if the defendant had had notice of the real circumstances, the plaintiff might, consistently with the above principle, have maintained an action on such new implied contract. (See The Duke of Norfolk v. Worthy, 1 Camp. 338). The Court, however, thought that the money having been paid by the plaintiff to and received by the defendant as the money of R., and the defendant not having any reason to suppose, or any means of knowing, that the money was in fact the plaintiff's, it would be unjust to the defendant, and he would be unfairly prejudiced, if he were subjected to an action at the suit of the plaintiff without any previous notice of the real facts, so as to enable him to pay or tender the amount without being subjected to the costs of an action. And notwithstanding the doubt expressed by Alderson, B., in Rayner v. Grote, whether the case was well decided on that ground, it is apprehended, that upon the sound and reasonable principle that the right of the party really interested to come in and sue, is limited to-cases in which the defendant will not be unfairly prejudiced thereby, the judgment of the Court was correct, and is in accordance with the rule laid down in Schmaltz v. Avery and Rayner v. Grote. Humble v. Hunter (12 Q. B. 310; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 1021) is a case somewhat analogous, in the principle on which it was decided, to those already commented upon. In that case A., an agent, had executed a charterparty, and described himself therein as "owner" of the ship; and in an action on the charterparty for freight, demurrage, &c., the plaintiff, who was the real owner, sought to give evidence at the trial that she was the owner, and that A. had executed the charterparty as her agent only. The evidence was objected to, but received; and upon motion for a new trial, the Court, referring to Lucas v. De la Cour, (1 Mau. & S. 249), held that the plaintiff must be taken to have allowed A. to enter into the contract describing himself as owner, and that she was bound thereby. And per Lord Denman, C. J., "You have a right to the benefit you contemplate from the character, credit, and substance of the party with whom you contract."

The result of the above cases appears to be, that in contracts where the plaintiff has described himself as an agent, but has not named his supposed principal, the plaintiff may shew that he is the real principal, and may sue as such on the contract, and this whether it be executed or executory; subject, perhaps, to the defendant shewing affirmatively that he declined to deal with the plaintiff except as an agent only, and would not have dealt with him as principal: and that in such cases parol evidence, that the party describing himself as agent is the real principal, is not inadmissible on the ground that it contradicts the written contract; for inasmuch as the defendant contracted with an unnamed principal, he contracted with that principal whoever he might eventually prove to be; and the evidence is not admitted to discharge the plaintiff from any liability he might have incurred as agent, but to enable him to shew who is the party really interested, without any unfair prejudice to the defendant. (See Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 844; and the observations of Patteson, J., upon this point in Schmaltz v. Avery). But where a person describes himself as agent for a supposed principal, whom he names, he cannot declare himself to be the real principal, and sue as such; for to allow such a course might be to the prejudice of the defendant, who may have relied on the character or skill of the supposed principal; and would also be, in the case of a written contract, to contradict the written agreement by parol evidence. A question may arise whether the plaintiff can sue, where the supposed principal in whose name he contracted is a non-existent and purely fictitious person: in such a case the defendant cannot be supposed to have relied on the character, skill, or credit of the supposed principal, and could, therefore, scarcely be prejudiced by the introduction of the plaintiff as the real principal; but in the case of a written contract, it is apprehended that the parol testimony, that the plaintiff was the real principal, would be open to the objection that it tends to contradict the written instrument. It will be observed that a distinction was drawn by Alderson, B., in Rayner v. Grote, between executed and executory contracts, in cases in which the supposed principal is named in the contract; and he was of opinion, that as in the former it would be immaterial to the defendant whom he paid, the supposed agent might declare himself to be the principal, and sue as such on the executed contract. But it is apprehended that this right must be confined to cases in which the execution of the contract has raised a new implied contract, which entitles the plaintiff to sue thereon for a remuneration, in the nature of a quantum meruit, for the benefit conferred; inasmuch as it is difficult to see how an express contract, which in its origin, and before execution, was not a contract with the plaintiff as principal, can by its mere execution become a contract with him so as to entitle him to sue on such express contract. In Humble v. Hunter the contract appears to have been executed, but the plaintiff had declared on the charterparty itself; and Patteson, J., observed, "The plaintiff here must be taken to have allowed her agent to contract in this form, (i. e. as owner), and must be bound by his act."

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly (pursuant to special appointment last term) on Tuesday moved the Court of Queen's Bench for the renewal of Mr. Barber's certificate. Sir Fitzroy observed that he had been induced to render his assistance in the cause solely from a full conviction of its entire justice; and that after the most minute investigation, he had satisfied himself that the previous difficulties had arisen from the complication of circumstances and an imperfect knowledge of the actual facts. He then reviewed the elaborate judgment of 1860, and contended that the new evidence completely explained away and removed the grounds upon which that judgment was based. The recently discovered private instructions to his solicitor by Sanders (Fletcher's principal confederate in the frauds) was a most remarkable revelation, and threw a flood of light upon points of vital importance to the applicant. A further statement of Mrs. Dorey had also been discovered; and both of these narratives, especially that of Sanders, fully confirmed the statements which years before had been made by Mr. Barber, when he could have had no conception that such a means of testing his veracity could ever be supplied. "I have," said Sir Fitzroy Kelly, "thoroughly analysed and sifted the voluminous documents in this matter, and if it can be shewn that Mr. Barber has in any single instance wilfully made one misstatement, I give up his case." It appeared that Fletcher had for twenty years been more or less actively employed in tracing owners to unclaimed dividends; in some cases helping parties to their rights; but when he could not find the true owners, he and his confederates obtained the fund by personation and forgery. In the sixteen years prior to his introduction to Mr. Barber's office, Fletcher had not only in numerous instances imposed upon solicitors, proctors, brokers, and the Bank officials, but also upon the solicitors and counsel for the Crown. In one instance, where the Bank of England had refused to pay over the money, from an avowed mistrust of the claim, Fletcher had the audacity to file a bill in Chancery; and the story which he fabricated, and supported by false affidavits, so effectually deceived the counsel for the Crown, that they consented to the application without argument, and the Bank, under an order from the Court of Chancery, paid the money—upwards of 4000*l*. At the conclusion of Sir Fitzroy Kelly's argument, which occupied seven hours, the Court said, "We will read all the affidavits, and intimate on a future day whether or not a rule nisi will be granted."

AN INTELLIGENT JURY.—In an action tried at Taunton last week to recover possession of some land, Mr. Justice Crowder, in directing the jury that the plaintiff's case had been clearly proved, spoke of Mr. Sergeant Kinglake, the plaintiff's counsel, as his "Brother Kinglake." The jury, however, had determined upon giving their verdict the other way, and, as a reason for disregarding the summing up of the learned judge, one of them was heard to address a fellow-juror thus—"Didst thee hear the judge call that counsel 'brother'? Dost thee think it is likely he was going to say anything against his own brother?"

RECENT CASES ON COMMERCIAL LAW.

1. TINDALL v. TAYLOR.—2. EDWARD v. TREVELLICK.

In a recent number we offered some comments upon the case of Gibson v. Sturge, and we now call attention to a decision of somewhat kindred character, namely, Tindall v. Taylor, (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 112). The question involved in it refers to the right of a consignor of goods to demand their redelivery to himself, as against the owner of the ship, after they have been once shipped. Upon the pleadings these facts were admitted:—The defendant had shipped goods on board a vessel about to proceed from London to Port Philip, in Australia, and was to pay freight in advance two months after the vessel should have set sail. After a reasonable time had elapsed for the sailing of the ship, and within a reasonable time before she sailed, he demanded a redelivery of the goods; but before such demand the captain had signed the bills of lading, making the goods deliverable to consignees at Port Philip, one of which bills the defendant had transmitted to the consignees, who, however, were his agents, of which the shipowners had notice at the time of the demand. The action was for the freight for carrying the goods to Port Philip after such demand, and the Court of Queen's Bench decided that it was recoverable under the circumstances. They recognised the doctrine laid down in Abb. Ship. 595, 596, 7th ed., that "a merchant who has laden goods cannot insist upon having them relanded, and delivered to him, without paying the freight that might become due for the carriage of them, and indemnifying the master against the consequences of any bill of lading signed by him." In answer to the argument that there could be no lien on the goods for freight not yet earned or due, the Court said, that when the goods were laden to be carried on a voyage, there was a contract that the master should carry them in the ship upon that voyage for freight, and, like other contracts, it could not be dissolved, except by the consent of both parties. It was conceded, however, that, by the usage of trade, the merchant, if he demands the goods in a reasonable time before the ship sails, is entitled to have them delivered back to him on paying the freight that might become due for the carriage of them, and indemnifying the master against the consequences of the bills of lading. The Court did not decide the question, whether wilful and unjustifiable delay in commencing the voyage would entitle the consignor to rescind the contract, or only entitle him to a cross action. With regard to the consignees being mere agents of the consignor, the Court said, that as such agents they might have had authority to indorse the bill of lading to a purchaser of the goods, who, as assignee of the bill of lading for valuable consideration, would have become proprietor of the goods, and entitled to demand them from the master. Although an action of contract could not have been maintained by the indorsee, (Thompson v. Dornay, 14 M. & W. 403), yet he might sue the master for detaining or converting them, and the latter would be estopped by his declaration in the bill of lading from denying that he had the goods. Besides a contingent power of sale, the consignees, as the Court observed, under the Factors Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 1, though only agents, would have had a right to pledge the goods, and to indorse the bill of lading to the pawnee, who would have a remedy against the master.

The Court saw no objection to the goods having been carried all the distance to Port Philip after they had been demanded back, saying it had not been suggested what the master ought to have done with them if he did not deliver them back when demanded, and that the contract remained in full force.

We may here notice the case of Edward v. Trevel- lick, (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 110), which was an action by a seaman for his wages. The defence was, that the plaintiff had engaged to serve on board a British merchant ship from Liverpool to San Francisco, and that he deserted after the passing of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, which makes desertion from such ships a penal offence. The plaintiff replied, that the captain and officers flogged him with unreasonable cruelty and severity, although he had not been guilty of mutinous or improper conduct, and in order to escape from such cruelty he deserted. This replication was held good on demurrer, as setting forth facts which showed that the plaintiff had not "deserted," within the technical meaning of that word. The Court adopted this as a test—whether on these facts the plaintiff could have been found guilty of the offence of desertion? Erle, J., in answer to the argument that there ought to have been such misconduct of the captain as endangered the plaintiff's life or limbs, said—"There is no law which obliges a sailor to remain in the ship, and submit to any treatment short of danger to his life." In the course of the argument his Lordship also said—"The contract between master and servant is for the mutual performance of a series of acts; and if an act is done by one party which breaks his part of the contract, it entitles the other party to consider the contract broken, and to put an end to it."

A second replication stated these facts—that the plaintiff was a negro; that negroes were bought and sold as slaves in divers of the United States; that the captain threatened to sell the plaintiff as a slave to certain citizens of the United States; that San Francisco is situated in one of them; and the plaintiff having just and reasonable grounds for believing that the threat would be carried into execution, and in order to prevent it, deserted. This replication was held to be bad, upon the ground that it did not shew that the place where the threat of the captain to sell the plaintiff was to take effect was one where slaves could be bought and sold.

Correspondence.

A COURT-HOUSE IN UPPER CANADA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The following extract is taken from an account lately sent by a correspondent of a highly respectable paper, and may, I believe, be relied upon for its accuracy. It will doubtless amuse some among your readers:—

"The Division or County Courts in Upper Canada were established some few years ago for the trial of civil causes in which the amounts at issue do not exceed the sum of 25*l*. They are presided over by a barrister, who is also chairman of the quarter sessions, and generally termed judge, and who makes the circuit of the different townships in which the courts are held about once in every two months. . . . The cases are decided in a manner truly patriarchal: the judge hears the evidence, and gives his judgment accordingly; and as this decision is guided more by justice than by the strict letter of the law, and the cost is very trifling, the parties generally return to their homes perfectly satisfied.

"A short time ago I accompanied a young barrister, who was about to plead a cause before one of these courts in one of the remotest parts of the county of Limcoe. . . . The apartment in which the court was held had been principal room in a log shanty, and had been divided along one side by a strong wooden bar, to keep the crowd at a respectful distance from the judge and the bar. . . . The judge availed himself on this occasion of a power which he possesses, of summoning a jury of five to take the responsibility of the decision off his shoulders.

"The jury having stowed themselves in a corner of the room, the plaintiff, an artful fellow, commenced pleading his own cause, and after cross-examination of witnesses and a little perjury, my friend replied in a most powerful speech, demolishing his adversary in a manner which established his fame in that region. When the case was closed, a difficulty presented itself in the fact of there being no room to which the jury could retire to consult upon their verdict. The judge, however, soon arranged this, by telling the jury to betake themselves to some quiet spot out of doors, charging them on their honour not to speak to any one until their return. The jury accordingly went out, and after looking about them, they with one consent, and with wonderful foresight and sagacity, betook themselves to the orchard, and squatted down under an apple tree, to combine mastication with argument. In about the time required to eat half-a-dozen apples a-piece and to cram their pockets, they returned, and, as was fully expected, gave a verdict for the defendant. "The crest-fallen plaintiff applied for a new trial, and vowed that next time he would not be beaten for want of a lawyer."

I am, Sir,
YOUR CONSTANT READER.

Temple, February, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—With reference to the article which appeared in a recent number of THE JURIST, (ante, p. 104), I beg to offer the following suggestion:—Let special jurors be summoned to try, not merely questions of pounds, shillings, and pence, but the more vital ones which affect the life of individuals and the safety of the public; or let a verdict returned by a majority of eight of the jury, and sanctioned by the judge, be equivalent to an unanimous finding. There is no practical difficulty. The judge might deliver to the officer of the court a sealed paper containing his opinion: if the jury are unanimous, let it be destroyed unopened; if not, let the verdict of eight jurymen, coinciding with that of the judge, be a legal finding; if the judge and the eight jurymen disagree, let them be discharged.

Yours truly,
W. J. A.

ECCENTRICITIES OF THE BAR.—During the late Somerset Sessions, held at Wells, a young woman was indicted for stealing a 10*l.* bank-note, the property of a clergyman, in whose service she had been living. Mr. L., solicitor for the defence, had prepared a brief, which he had given to Mr. C., barrister; but the learned counsel was suddenly called to the Cornwall Assizes; he therefore handed his brief over to Mr. P., the brief being indorsed, "For the prisoner." When the case was called, however, Mr. P. opened the case for the prosecution, and proceeded to examine the witnesses with all the vigour of forensic skill, in order to insure a conviction. The Court then asked the prisoner if she had any one to defend her. "Oh, yes," she said; "Mr. L." But Mr. L.'s brief was in Mr. P.'s hands, who was prosecuting. What was to be done? The learned counsel, in some confusion, amid general laughter, looked at his brief, and found he had been making every effort to procure the conviction of the prisoner he was engaged to defend. His self-possession, however, never left him, and after apologising to the Court, he "hammered" into the jury such a plausible defence, begging they would take no notice of what he had been saying before, that at the end of the case the jury acquitted the prisoner.

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM of the LAW and PRACTICE of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In two price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmout the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject. Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his Vendors and Purchasers enters into a disquisition on this judgment, &c.'—18 Jurist, p. 372."

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnishable assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 28, 1855.

THE decisions of our superior tribunals upon the county court system, now completely established throughout the length and breadth of the land, are of importance to the community at large, as well as to the legal profession, and we propose to call attention to some of the most recent cases falling under this description*. Among these we may rank Taylor v. The Crowland Gas and Coke Company, decided last week in the Exchequer, and reported in our last number, (part 1, p. 358). It was an action for the recovery of wages, brought against a company completely registered under the Joint-stock Companies Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of 7l. 1s.

The company, which consisted of numerous shareholders, had its office and carried on business at Crowland, in Lincolnshire, within the jurisdiction of the county court of that place, and when the action was brought the plaintiff dwelt within twenty miles of that place, but a distance of more than twenty miles from several of the shareholders. The question was, whether he was entitled to costs, as coming within the concurrent clause, or the following one, (sects. 128 and 129), of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

First, could a plaint have been entered for this claim in the county court? The learned judges held that it could, as a corporation or quasi corporation may be sued therein. (Sects. 58 and 142 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95; rule 43 of the County Court Practice).

Secondly, did the plaintiff dwell more than twenty miles from the defendant? It had been decided in Parry v. Davies (1 Lownd., M., & P. 379) and Doyle v. Lawrence, (2 Lownd., M., & P. 378), that in the case of several defendants, if any one of them dwelt more than twenty miles from the plaintiff, he might sue in a superior court. It was now held, however, that a corporation may be said to dwell where it carries on its business, and therefore that the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs upon this ground.

It is remarkable that the concurrent clause above referred to (sect. 128) makes a distinction in words between dwelling and carrying on business, in those parts of it which relate to the distance at which the parties dwell from each other, and to the cause of action arising within the defendant's district. Thus, the plaintiff may sue in a superior court "where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant*," i. e. from where the defendant dwells, (Johnson v. Ward, 6 Dowl. & L. 720), "or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the Court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought." With reference to this distinction, Pollock, C. B., said in the principal case, "These two expressions are found here in consequence of that sort of incuria which now and then creeps into the framing of acts of Parliament, for I do not believe that any distinction was meant by the difference of expression in the two parts of this section, "dwells" and "dwells or carries on his business."

* In former articles, we have reviewed, inter alia, Herniman v. Smith, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 190); Walton v. Borthwick, (Id. 142); and other cases as to "cause of action" in a foreign district, under sect. 60 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, (ante, p. 31). Stokes v. Grissell, (14 C. B. 678), as to the measurement of the twenty miles, under sect. 128, (18 Jur., part 2, p. 173). See also a review of county court cases, 16 Jur., part 2, p. 109.

It was contended for the plaintiff that he should have his costs, because the judgment of a county court against such a corporation could not be enforced by the county court against the actual or former shareholders in the company, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 66. The Court agreed that it could not be enforced in such manner by the county court; but said, that although this might be a good reason for allowing the costs, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 4, upon the ground that the case was a fit one to be tried in a superior court, yet a sufficient reason must be made out for the exercise of that jurisdiction, by shewing that there were no means of getting satisfaction from the funds of the corporation, and that it was necessary to get it from the members of the body.

A point worthy of being noted with reference to this matter was decided in Stokes v. Grissell, (14 C. B. 678), namely, that where the plaintiff states in his affidavit that he does not believe that the defendant dwelt or carried on his business, at the time of the commencement of the action, within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the cause of action wholly arose, it is sufficient, in the absence of an affidavit by the defendant that he does dwell or carry on his business there. The Court said the distinction was between proving an affirmative, when you can speak to a fact, or a negative, when you can speak only to your belief†.

While upon the subject of county courts, we may observe, that the exceptional jurisdiction conferred by the blunder in the City of London Small Debts Act, 15 Vict. c. 77, has naturally produced decisions exceptional to those which had proceeded upon the general county court jurisdiction§. By sect. 119 of that act, a sum exceeding fifty pounds must be recovered in actions ex contractu in the superior courts, and five pounds in actions ex delicto, under penalty of losing costs. By sect. 120, (copied from sect. 129 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), he is to be deprived of costs if he recover less than 20*l.* in an action ex contractu in the superior courts.

Now, it has been held, that although a judge must

* The words of the City of London Small Debts Act, 15 Vict. c. 77, s. 118, are merely, "where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant." It may be convenient to mention that this act will be found in the appendix to the Statutes at Large. (15 & 16 Vict., p. 500).

† And see, as to what is a carrying on of business within the meaning of the act, Mitchell v. Hender, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 430) id.

‡ And see further, as to making out a merely prima facie case, Kirby v. Hickson, (1 Lownd., M., & P. 364).

certify for costs forthwith under the general acts, he may certify at any time under this act, where the sum recovered is between 20*l.* and 50*l.*; (Chaplin v. Levy, 9 Exch. 673*); that although under the general acts the plaintiff must apply for his costs in order to have them, yet under this act, where the sum recovered is between 20*l.* and 50*l.*, the old practice, of entering a suggestion by the defendant to deprive the plaintiff of costs, must be resorted to; (Castrigue v. Page, 22 L. J., C. P., 145); and that although under the general acts an attorney has no privilege to sue in a superior court, (13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 11), yet under this act he retains that common-law privilege if the sum recovered is between 20*l.* and 50*l.* (Borodale v. Nelson, 14 C. B. 655; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 431). The section in the city act which deprives of costs in cases where less than 50*l.* is recovered (sect. 119) was copied by mistake from sect. 129 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, instead of sect. 11 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61; and the former section (sect. 129) had been held not to take away the attorney's privilege. (Lewis v. Hance, 11 Q. B. 921; Jones v. Brown, 2 Exch. 329).

Thus exception begets exception, and a legislative mistake becomes a "medium filum" for numerous distinctions, which otherwise would never have existed. It is a strange system that metes out one kind of justice with reference to the city of London, and a different kind in every other part of the kingdom; that requires a suitor to recover 50*l.*, or to lose his costs, when the other litigant resides in the city, but is satisfied with anything over 20*l.* if he lives in Middlesex.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Court of Exchequer Chamber heard errors from the Court of Queen's Bench on the 24th and 26th inst., and will hear them from the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer on the 9th of May and following days.

John Arthur Shakespear, Esq., barrister-at-law, has been appointed member of the Legislative Council of Jamaica.

In the case of the Newtons, convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for an assault on Mr. Kerr, an application was made to the Court of Queen's Bench (April 23) for a mandamus commanding the Attorney-General to grant his fiat for a writ of error; but the Court refused to grant the application, upon the ground that they had no jurisdiction to review the decision of the Attorney-General in the matter.

It has been decided in the Court of Common Pleas, (Swann v. Dakins, April 17), that one of the priests in ordinary at the Chapel Royal is privileged from arrest under a county court commitment on a judgment summons, and that such commitment was in the nature of a limited ca. sa.

RECENT CASES ON COMMERCIAL LAW.

STEEL v. SCHOMBERG.

AMONG the provisions introduced, for the security of the public, into the statute consolidating the laws relating to the carriage of passengers by sea (15 & 16 Vict. c. 44) are the following:—"No passenger ship shall clear out or proceed to sea until the master thereof shall have obtained from the emigration officer at the port of clearance a certificate, under his hand, that all the requirements of the act, so far as the same can be complied with before the departure of such ship, have been duly complied with." (Sect. 10). "Nor if there shall be on board as cargo any horses, cattle, gunpowder, vitriol, lucifer matches, guano, green hides, or any other article, whether as cargo or ballast, which, by reason of its nature or quantity, shall be deemed by the emigration officer at the port of clearance likely to endanger the health or lives of the passengers, or the safety of the ship." (Sect. 26). "Nor unless the ship shall have been surveyed, under the direction of the emigration officer at the port of clearance, but at the expense of the owner or charterer thereof, by two or more competent surveyors, to be appointed by the Colonial, Land, and Emigration Commissioners for each port; nor unless it shall be reported by such surveyors that the ship is in their opinion seaworthy, and fit in all respects for her intended voyage." (Sect. 16). A ship fitted up for a voyage to Melbourne had been duly surveyed by three surveyors under this clause; but after she had commenced loading, the emigration officer saw the ship, and, acting bonâ fide in the discharge of his duty, declined to give his certificate, on the ground that the ship was eighteen inches too deep in the water, and must be lightened at least a foot. He did not object to any articles loaded in the ship, and there were, in fact, none of the prohibited articles on board. In an action against him for refusing the certificate, the Court held that he was justified in his refusal under the statute, if he thought the quantity of the cargo such as to endanger the ship, and that his discretion in this respect was not affected by the report of the surveyors under the 16th section. (Steel v. Schomberg, 24 L. J., Q. B., 87).

* There is no fixed time within which an application for costs is to be made, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 4, in cases where the county and superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction. (Reed v. Gardner, 22 L. J., Ex., 253).

This is an important decision, as tending to enlarge, rather than restrain, the powers vested in the emigration officer for the safety of the public.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—A correspondent in your last number suggests that special jurors should be summoned to try cases which affect the life of individuals and the safety of the public, or that a verdict returned by a majority of eight of the jury, and sanctioned by the judge, should be equivalent to an unanimous finding. If trial by jury is to be maintained as an institution of the country, it is a matter of the utmost importance that it should, as an institution, be as perfect as possible, not calculated, on the one hand, to stand between crime, and the punishment which should follow its commission; or, on the other hand, to press upon the liberty of the subject, by affording opportunity for partiality or prejudice to kick the beam of justice. In the ordinary criminal cases tried at assizes and sessions the class of persons from whom jurors are chosen may be as capable as those in a higher and more educated sphere of deciding upon the simple facts brought before them; but not so in cases of a more complicated nature, where not only much acumen and intelligence, but also a vigilant and lengthened mental attention, is required. For the trial of cases of this description, amongst which murder should undoubtedly be classed, I can see no objection to the summoning of special jurors. It has been said that the principle of requiring unanimity in a jury is attended at least with one practical advantage of the utmost importance—that, in the event of a difference of opinion, it secures a discussion, and enables any one dissentient juror to compel the other eleven fully and carefully to reconsider the question. In the Third Report of the Common-law Commissioners it was recommended, that if, after a deliberation of twelve hours, nine out of the twelve concurred, their verdict should be received. The only novelty in the suggestion of your late correspondent is in requiring the sanction of the judge to the verdict of a majority of eight. The peculiar merit of this scheme would seem to consist in establishing a safeguard against a majority (and the particular number of which that majority is to consist seems to be of little importance) finding a perverse verdict. There also should be a time fixed during which unanimity is essential in order to secure the advantage of full deliberation. Six, and not, as the commissioners have recommended, twelve, hours would be amply sufficient for this purpose. In a recent number you pointed to the extraordinary conclusions which under the existing system are sometimes arrived at. Legislation is required upon the subject, and the thinking part of the community would hail with pleasure a measure which should have for its object a sound and well-devised alteration in the existing system.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

G. F.

Reviews.

A Treatise upon the Law of Life Assurance, upon the Constitution of Assurance Companies, the Construction of their Deeds of Settlement, the Sale of Reversionary Interests, and Equitable Liens arising in connexion with Life Policies; with an Appendix of Precedents for the Assignment of Policies by way of Sale, Mortgage, and Settlement; Notes of Cases, Statutes, and an Index of Private Acts obtained by Assurance Companies. By CHARLES JOHN BUNYON, Esq., M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

[Wildy & Sons, 1855.]

THE subject of life assurance is one of general interest, both in a commercial and social point of view. Mr. Bunyon has thus described the uses to which it may be put:—

"By this means the merchant or professional man may secure for his family, by anticipation, that provision which would otherwise have required a long life of care to obtain. The debtor, whose income is dependent on his life and exertion, may protect his creditor from that loss which his early death would occasion, and thereby obtain time and opportunity for the gradual extinction of his liabilities. The tenant for life, or the annuitant, the lessee for lives or years determinable with lives, or the copyholder, may, by a moderate payment proportionate to his means, obtain for his property the advantages of a permanent investment, and thus in the latter case relieve it, at least to a great extent, from the onerous character of its tenure." (P. 2).

Life assurance, then, being so useful and so varied in its application, there was need of a practical exposition of the law by which the relative positions of the insured and the insurer, or, in other words, the public and those associations by which life assurance is conducted, are defined, and the constitution of the latter regulated. Mr. Bunyon has brought legal ability to the execution of his task, and has produced a text-book which we can recommend to the Profession and the public, and more especially to that class of the latter who fall under the denomination of directors, actuaries, managers, and secretaries, too many of whom, we fear, enter upon their duties with little, if any, knowledge of the highly onerous and responsible trusts imposed upon them. The first chapter is devoted to the consideration of "the nature of the contract" at common law, and as modified by statute. It must be satisfactory to Mr. Bunyon to know that his strictures upon the case of Godsall v. Boldero (9 East, 72; 2 Smith's L. C. 157) have lately received the judicial sanction of the Exchequer Chamber in Dalby v. The India and London Life Assurance Company, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 1024); also by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in the still more recent decision of Law v. The London Indisputable Life Policy Company, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 178). Although at the present day, owing to the competition in life insurance business, and the odium which attaches to any society disputing a claim by the representatives of the insured, there is less risk of the purpose for which an assurance has been effected being ultimately defeated by the insurers disputing their liability, yet to clearly and precisely define the nature, as well as arrange the basis, of their contract, is palpably the duty and interest of both contracting parties. This is true of all contracts, but more especially of that with which we are now concerned, inasmuch as to one of the parties, the insured, the consequences of a miscarriage might be the defeating the end and purpose of many years' self-denial and industry. The following extract from the second chapter, in which "the proposal" is treated of, deserves attention:—

"The insurers, it may be assumed, prior to the contract, are entirely ignorant of the premises upon which it may be founded, and must depend for them upon the insured; his statements are therefore the basis upon which the contract proceeds, and their truth, as to all material points, is essential to its validity. It is important to observe, that the principle upon which the maxim 'caveat emptor' is founded does not apply to the contract of insurance. Not only must the party proposing the insurance abstain from making any deceptive representation, but he must observe the utmost degree of good faith, uberrima fides. Not only is he required to state all matters within his knowledge which he believes to be material to the question of the assurance, but all which, in point of fact, are so. If he conceals anything which he knows to be material it is a fraud. But besides that, if he conceals anything which may influence the rate of premium which the underwriter may require, although he does not know that it would have that effect, such concealment entirely vitiates the policy. An entire disclosure must then be made of all material facts known to the insured; and not only so, but all representations made by him as to material facts must be substantially correct; and to this may be added, that where a representation amounts to a warranty, it must not only be substantially, but literally, true." (P. 30).

The author then proceeds to deal with the statements required in the declaration or proposal, and to shew by decided cases the effect upon the contract of a warranty, misrepresentation, or concealment contained in such statements, whether by the party proposing to insure, or by his referees. Mr. Bunyon thinks that there are grave objections to the payment of the medical referee's fee by the office; "for," he says, "we have already seen the medical referee is the agent, in respect of his replies, of the proposer, and the latter is answerable for any want of candour or neglect by him; while, if the fee were paid by the company, the question would arise, whether his position were not changed, and whether he had not become the agent of the insurers, instead of the party making the proposal." (P. 57).

We believe this, however, to be a difficulty more imaginary than real, and that the very fact of making the medical referee the agent of the company tends to destroy the natural bias which Mr. Bunyon, in the following paragraph, says exists in favour of the patient, and, if possible, to make him more scrupulously exact in his report. This system is now generally adopted by well-conducted offices, and has not been found to work detrimentally to their interests. "The policy and its conditions" are next treated of; and under this head (at p. 61) will be found some pertinent and useful remarks upon the law as it affects the negotiability of policies of insurance. The usual conditions of a policy, with the construction that the Courts have put upon them, are fully discussed, the subject being well closed by Lord St. Leonards' observations in Anderson v. Fitzgerald (21 Law T. 245, Dom. Proc.) upon the general rules of construction applicable to such instruments. "A policy," said his Lordship, "ought to be so framed that 'he who runs may read'—with such deliberate care that no form of expression by which the party insured can be caught on the one hand, or by which the company can be cheated on the other, should be found on the face of it, and nothing should be wanting in it the absence of which may lead to such result." (See p. 80). The subject of the indisputability of a policy, when once issued, has occupied much attention, and created some discussion—not so much, perhaps, with the legal as with the insuring world: with the former it has, we believe, never been seriously doubted (as Mr. Bunyon observes, p. 81) "that a condition, that the insurers shall not raise any objection even in the case of fraud, is a void condition."

Insurances against accidents, insurance against the birth of issue, and guarantee policies, as partaking in their nature of the character of life insurance, are not inappropriately introduced into the treatise. Under the head of "the constitution of assurance offices" Mr. Bunyon has put before his reader the requirements, effect, and general operation of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110; and in the same chapter has shewn how companies may be dissolved, and to what cases the Winding-up Acts apply. Next follows a chapter upon charters of incorporation, and the construction of deeds of settlement, and private acts of Parliament to amend deeds of settlement, in which the powers and position of the members, both as between themselves and strangers, are pointed out. Societies established under the Friendly Societies Acts enjoyed peculiar immunities in respect of life insurance to a limited extent. These privileges were, however, taken advantage of by companies not within the intention of the acts, and have been gradually withdrawn. Mr. Bunyon has pointed to the successive measures of the Legislature upon the subject, and the alterations in the rules of friendly societies rendered necessary by such enactments, which, as he observes, appear to have been little better than experiments. A chapter "concerning the powers and duties of directors, officers, and agents" concludes the first part of the work, and contains several useful suggestions.

Our author having thus, if we may so express it, started a policy, by shewing the nature of the contract, the relative position of the insured and insurer at its inception, the constitution of life offices, and the duties of those who have the conduct of them, proceeds, in the second part of the work, to deal with the subject in its intermediate state—that is, in the interval which elapses between the making of the contract and the fulfilment of its purpose by the happening of the contingency upon which it depends—the death of the life insured. He accordingly, in a series of eight chapters, points out the various modes in which a policy may be dealt with by assignment, and how liens may be created, and treats of money advances made by offices by way of mortgage of their own policies, or upon personal security, the sale of reversionary interests, the application of policies as securities for fines payable on the renewal of leaseholds, and the voluntary assignment of policies. The third and concluding part of the work treats in its first chapter of the rights and interests of persons under disabilities, such as infancy, coverture, lunacy, or felony. The claim and its satisfaction, together with the enforcement of claims by an action at law or a suit in equity, occupy the following two chapters; and therein Mr. Bunyon has pointed out the steps necessary to establish the claim by proof of death and evidence of title to the sum insured. Annuities are granted by many, if not all, life offices, and are intimately connected with the subject of risks on lives. The next chapter is accordingly devoted to the consideration of the sale and purchase of annuities, with the provisions of the Annuity Acts requiring enrolment in the Court of Chancery of a memorial of the instruments whereby they are granted. These apply to insurance offices, although completely registered, as well as to private individuals, and the consequence of the neglect to enrol an annuity (and the onus of inrolling lies upon the purchaser) is pointed out, (p. 351). The stamp laws, as bearing upon life insurance, and contracts in connexion therewith, are fully considered in the succeeding chapter, where tables and full information in relation to the subject will be found. "The Succession Duty Act of 1853 is the most important measure of the session, and marks an epoch in the history of taxation, not only on account of the magnitude of the sum proposed to be levied under it, but as evolving a new principle in permitting a tax upon past transactions." Mr. Bunyon then proceeds to analyse the provisions of the stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, (the Succession Duty Act), and shews how life policies and post-obit securities are thereby affected. The boon conferred upon the provident portion of the community by the exemption in the Income Tax Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34) in respect of amounts paid by way of annual premiums of life insurances is touched upon. Mr. Bunyon, however, considers, and no doubt with much probability, that these enactments are "only instalments of those which may be expected," and thinks that the intention to legislate upon the subject may have existed as early as the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act. Our author has evidently no great confidence in the suggestions of the recent select committee on insurance associations. The two subjects which principally ingrossed their attention were, as the author observes, (p. 384), first, "what protection was to be required for the public against the insolvency and improper management of assurance companies; and, secondly, in what manner and form periodical accounts of their transactions, and the state of their funds, were to be required to be registered and published." The publication of accounts by all companies, and a paid-up capital of 10,000*l.* invested in the public funds by new societies before complete registration, were suggested by the committee as sufficient remedies. The difficulty of procuring any real information from the publication of accounts in the form proposed is shewn by the following extract:—"Such accounts will be like the play 'with the character of Hamlet omitted by special desire, since they are wanting in the true test of such accounts, namely, the table of mortality and the rate of interest used in calculating the assets and liabilities of the company in the general valuation." Of the desirability of obtaining "a material guarantie," in the shape of 10,000*l.*, there can be no doubt; and such a requirement, we are satisfied, would work beneficially, not only for the public, but also for future real bona fide associations; too many of the existing companies, we fear, having started with a capital insufficient to their beneficial working. Much, however, of the success of such a scheme would depend upon the regulations laid down by Parliament for the investment of the capital sum required. Mr. Bunyon thinks that the law of life insurance and annuities requires amendment, in two respects at least—first, in passing an act to the effect that no subsequent expiration of a sufficient insurable interest should invalidate an assurance contract; secondly, in dispensing with the enrolment of annuities granted by insurance companies. His first suggestion would, perhaps, since the recent decisions, appear to be unnecessary, but in the second we fully concur. Some remarks upon the proposed alteration in making life policies assignable at law conclude the third and last part of the work. The appendix contains several precedents of forms, to which, however, we think an addition might judiciously be made of some of those more frequently in use, such as the form of proposal and policy.

CRIMINAL-LAW PROCEDURE.

THE following are the resolutions of the House of Lords in connexion with Lord Brougham's Criminal-law Procedure Bill:—

1. That it is the duty of the Government to provide effectually for the execution of the criminal law, by the discovery, the securing, and the prosecution of offenders.
2. That the local police establishments ought to be under the direct superintendence and control of the Government; and that the same rules should, as nearly as local circumstances will permit, be everywhere applied.
3. That the appointment of a regular constabulary force should be obligatory upon the local authorities.
4. That in addition to such regular force, a reserve force ought to be maintained of persons with moderate pay, to be called out for a short time merely in order to be inspected and trained, and to be bound to serve when required by the magistrate.
5. That a sufficient number of stipendiary magistrates should be appointed in the other towns of considerable size, with the powers and duties of those appointed for London and Middlesex, so far as these powers and duties relate to the examination and commitment of persons charged with offences, and to the criminal jurisdiction vested in them.
6. That the prosecution of offenders should be intrusted to an officer appointed by the Government, with such number of subordinate officers as may be required for conducting prosecutions in the counties and larger towns; but that until such a measure can be adopted, it is expedient to appoint barristers, who shall advise upon and conduct the prosecutions in the Central Criminal Court and the Courts of Quarter Session of Middlesex and Surrey.
7. That the public prosecutor should in all the graver cases, as the pleas of the Crown and forgery, proceed by bill before the grand jury; but in other cases should, at his discretion, be allowed to proceed upon commitment by a stipendiary magistrate, without any bill found.
8. That assizes should be holden four times a year in each county, and quarter sessions so frequently, and at such times relating to the assizes, as that a court of criminal jurisdiction shall sit once a fortnight in each county.
9. That to equalise the business, counties may be divided, and parts of different counties united, for the purposes of trial; and that persons may be tried, at the option of the public prosecutor, either in the district where the offence is alleged to have been committed, or in an adjoining district.
10. That the same criminal jurisdiction should be given to judges of the county courts as is at present possessed by the quarter sessions of the peace; that this jurisdiction should extend over the district subject to their civil jurisdiction; and that the justices of every county may be relieved from the obligation to hold sessions oftener than four times a year, whensoever it shall appear that, besides those four sessions and the assizes, there is a sufficient number of county court criminal sittings to give two criminal courts monthly in the district.
11. That a reasonable sum for trouble and expenses should be allowed to all persons summoned to attend as petty jurors on any criminal trial.

12. That the costs of every person tried and acquitted, or discharged for want of prosecution, should be paid out of the county rates, on certificate of the court before whom he was tried or brought for trial, or of the magistrate by whom he was discharged.

13. That in all prisons arrangements should, as far as possible, be made not only for separating the untried from the convicted, but for separating different prisoners of both classes.

14. That imprisonment should, as far as possible, be accompanied with the means of giving work to those who are willing to work, and whether untried, or sentenced to imprisonment without hard labour; that all the earnings of the untried should belong to them, and to the convicts a portion upon their discharge.

15. That a discretion should be vested in the governors, chaplains, and other superintendents of gaols, of improving the diet of convicts, according to their demeanour and industry.

16. That subject to the control of the superintendents, with the advice and consent of the chaplain, prisoners may be employed as assistant teachers in the prisons.

17. That the dietary of prisons ought never to allow more to convicts in proportion to the term of their imprisonment; and that in respect of diet, regard should be had, as far as possible, to the industry and other demeanour of the convicts under their sentences.

18. That justices of the peace in all cases in which they now have power to take bail, and coroners in cases of manslaughter, should have the power of allowing any person accused to go at large upon entering into his own recognisance to appear and take his trial; and that in cases of manslaughter coroners should also have the power to liberate upon bail.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

(Brought in by the Lord Chancellor)

Intituled "An Act to amend the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853."

Sect. 1. The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and this act to be construed together.

2. Repeal of the provision for determining the salary of the third commissioner.

3. Power to Lord Chancellor and Lords of the Treasury to appoint additional inspectors. Salary not to exceed 600*l*.

4. The acts of the board, how to be authenticated.

5. Entries in and extracts from the books of the board, how to be authenticated.

6. The board, or any commissioner or inspector, may require written accounts and statements and answers to inquiries relating to any charity, or the property or income thereof, to be rendered or made to them respectively by all or any of the following persons; that is to say,

Trustees or persons acting or concerned in the administration of the charity, its property or income, or in the receipt or payment of any monies thereof:

Agents of any such trustees or persons:

Depositaries of any funds or monies of the charity:

Persons in the beneficial receipt of any funds thereof, or of any income or stipend therefrom:

Persons whom the board or such commissioner or inspector shall have reasonable ground for considering to be in the possession of any property of the charity, or to be subject to any trust, duty, or charge for the benefit thereof:

Persons having the possession or control of any documents concerning the charity, or any property thereof:

And all other persons whose evidence the board or such commissioner or inspector shall think material to the matter in question:

And the board or such commissioner or inspector may require the persons rendering or making any such account, statement, or answer to verify the same by oath or otherwise, and may administer such oath.

7. Power to require transmission of deeds and documents belonging to charities.

8. Power to require trustees and others to attend (within ten miles of abode) and be examined.

9. Precepts or orders for the preceding purposes, how to be made.

10. Persons not complying with requisitions, &c. to be deemed guilty of a contempt of the Court of Chancery.

11. Persons making false returns or answers guilty of misdemeanour.

12. Power for the board to employ assistant inspectors and agents.

13. Power to allow remuneration to assistant inspectors and agents, and expenses to witnesses, and to charge the charity funds.

14. The board shall have power, subject to the appeal hereinafter provided, to make orders for the following purposes, and which shall be effectual for the same purposes accordingly; that is to say,

- (1). For the appointment of trustees of any charity in the place of any former trustees, or in addition to the existing trustees, or where there may be no trustees :
 - (2). For the removal of any trustees thereof for sufficient cause :
 - (3). For vesting any real estate of a charity, except copyhold hereditaments, but including leaseholds, in the trustees thereof for the time being, and for vesting in them any copyhold hereditaments, with the consent of the lord of the manor for the time being, or for enabling any person to surrender the same to the use of such trustees :
 - (4). For entitling such trustees to call for a transfer of any stock in the public funds, or of any shares or stock of any public company respectively, belonging to the charity, and for vesting in them all personal estate thereof, including choses in action, and a title to sue for the same :
 - (5). For vesting any real estate of a charity, except copyhold hereditaments, but including leaseholds, and for vesting any copyhold hereditaments, with the consent of the lord of the manor for the time being, in the official trustee of charity lands :
 - (6). For the payment, transfer, or deposit of any principal monies, stock in the public funds, or stock or shares of any public company, or securities belonging to a charity, to or with the official trustees of charitable funds :
 - (7). For entitling such official trustees to call for the transfer of any such stock or shares :
 - (8). For removing, after inquiry, any officer of a charity unfit for or neglecting the discharge of his duties, or for misconduct, or other sufficient cause, but where there shall be a special visitor of the charity appointed by the founder, and not absent from the kingdom or under incapacity, with his consent :
 - (9). For assigning to any officer of a charity removed from or resigning his office a pension or retiring allowance, to be provided wholly or partly out of the income of his successor, or any income of the charity :
 - (10). For removing persons improperly placed or retained in any almshouse or charitable institution, and for establishing any proper objects of the charity therein :
 - (11). For ascertaining and declaring the proper objects of any charity :
 - (12). For establishing any such scheme for the administration of a charity as the Court of Chancery would have jurisdiction to establish.
15. It shall be lawful for the board to make orders for any of the foregoing purposes, either upon the application of any parties or of their own authority ; and the 43rd section of the principal act, which authorises the applications therein mentioned to be made by all or any of the trustees, or persons administering or claiming to administer, or interested in any charity, or any two or more inhabitants of the parish or place within which it is administered or applicable, shall not be construed to preclude such applications by any other persons authorised thereto by the certificate of the board.
16. The official trustees of charitable funds may be empowered to call for transfers to them of stock.
17. Power to apportion parochial charities after division of parishes.
18. Public notices to be given of orders of the board for the appointment or removal of trustees of any charity, or for establishing any scheme for the administration or for apportioning the benefits thereof.
19. Proceedings upon the receipt of objections or suggestions.
20. The Attorney-General, or any trustee or person administering or interested, or claiming to be interested, in any charity, the subject of any order of the board made under the foregoing powers, and not being an order for vesting any real or personal estate of the charity in the trustees thereof, or in the official trustee of charity lands or charitable funds, or two inhabitants of any place within which the charity shall be applicable, or any person aggrieved by the same order, may, within three months after the publication thereof, but not afterwards, present a petition to the Court of Chancery, in a summary way, appealing against such order, and praying such relief as the case may require ; and the Court, upon the hearing of such petition, may confirm, vary, reverse, or annul the order appealed against, or remit such order to the board for reconsideration, with or without any declaration in relation thereto, or may make any substitutive or other order in relation to the matter of the appeal, and respecting the costs, charges, or expenses incident thereto, as to the Court may seem just ; and the Court, before hearing such petition, or during the proceedings thereon, may require from the board the reasons for any order made by them ; but no such petition of appeal shall be presented by any person, other than the Attorney-General, until written notice of the intention to present the same shall have been delivered to the commissioners at their office, under the hand of the appellant or his agent, by the space of twenty-one days at the least previously.

21. The Attorney-General, if he think fit, may appear ex officio as the respondent upon any such appeal not made by himself ; and where the Attorney-General shall be the appellant, and in any other case in which he shall not think fit to appear as the respondent, the secretary of the commissioners, or any person appointed by them, may, by their authority, appear as the respondent ; and all such costs, charges, and expenses of the Attorney-General, or of the secretary or nominee of the commissioners, as the Court may direct to be paid, shall be provided and paid out of the property or income of the charity, or both, as the Court may direct.

22. Where any municipal corporation in England or Wales not named in Schedule (A.) or (B.) of the act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, "for the regulation of municipal corporations," or any of the members of such corporation in his or their corporate capacity, shall be seised or possessed, either solely or together with any person or persons elected by such corporation, or by any particular member or class of members of such corporation, of any real or personal estate, wholly or partly upon any charitable trusts, and where any corporation sole or aggregate shall be so seised or possessed, or shall have the management of any real or personal property of any charity, and shall also be recipients of the benefit thereof, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon the petition of any person authorised by the board, or of the Attorney-General, to appoint trustees for the management of the charity, or of any real or personal estate thereof, and to order that any such real or personal estate shall be vested in, or shall be transferred or paid to, such trustees, or to the official trustees of charity lands or charitable funds respectively ; and any order for vesting any real estate in such trustees or trustee shall be effectual without any assurance ; and any order for vesting any stock in the public funds, or any stock or shares in any public company, in the newly-appointed trustees, or in the official trustees of charitable funds, may also entitle them to call for a transfer of such stock or shares respectively ; and any real or personal estate of which any such corporation, or any members thereof, shall not be divested, but of which new managing trustees shall be appointed, shall be held upon trust to be disposed of according to the direction of such managing trustees.

23. The secretary for the time being of the board shall be a corporation sole, by the name of the "Official Trustee of Charity Lands," for taking and holding charity lands, and by that name (instead of the name of "Treasurer of Public Charities") shall have perpetual succession ; and all land, or estates or interests in land, now vested in the "Treasurer of Public Charities" by that name, shall become, upon the passing of this act, and by virtue thereof, vested in like manner, and upon the same trusts, in the "Official Trustee of Charity Lands ;" and all provisions of the principal act which have reference to the "Treasurer of Public Charities" shall operate as if the name of the "Official Trustee of Charity Lands" had been used therein instead of the name of "Treasurer of Public Charities."

24. The acting trustees to grant leases, notwithstanding the legal estate is in the official trustee.

25. The Lord Chancellor may from time to time, by writing under his hand, appoint any persons to be the official trustees of charitable funds, and remove any such trustees ; and every such appointment or removal shall be published in the London Gazette.

26. The present official trustees of charitable funds, and their successors to be so appointed, shall have perpetual succession by the name of the "Official Trustees of Charitable Funds," and may hold by that name stock in the public funds, and stock and shares of any public company, securities, and monies, which shall respectively devolve to their successors, the official trustees of charitable funds for the time being, without transfer or assignment.

27. Funds to vest in the official trustees for the time being.

28. The official trustees to keep banking account.

29. All orders for payment of any money held upon such banking account shall be signed by one at least of the official trustees of charitable funds, not being the secretary of the board, and also by the secretary, and shall be countersigned by one of the commissioners, or shall be otherwise signed or authenticated in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, by order under his hand, direct; and such orders shall be a sufficient authority to the bankers paying the same for all such payments.

30. All principal monies belonging to any charity directed to be paid to the official trustees of charitable funds shall be paid to their account at such bank, and subject to any order of the court or judge or of the board by which respectively the payment shall have been authorised, shall be forthwith invested in the public funds in the names of the official trustees of charitable funds, for the benefit of the charity to which they shall belong.

31. Payments to the banking account, how to be made.

32. No transfer of any stock, shares, or securities shall be made to the official trustees of charitable funds, nor shall any money other than the dividends or interest of any such stock, shares, or securities as aforesaid be paid to their account, except in pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, or of some judge thereof, or of a district court of bankruptcy or county court, or of the board; and no transfer of any such stock, shares, or securities shall be made by the official trustees except under the order of such court or judge, or under the order of the board signed by two commissioners, or authenticated in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, by any order under his hand, direct; and no transfer to or by the official trustees shall be permitted by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any other company, contrary to this provision.

33. Copies of orders affecting the account of the official trustees to be sent to the board.

34. The board may require the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any public company, to suspend the transfer or the payment of dividends of any stock in the public funds, or any stock or shares of such public company, to which any charity shall be entitled, so that their order shall specify the stock or shares to be affected thereby, and the persons in whose names the same shall be standing, and the charity entitled thereto; and such order served on the said governor and company, or any public company, until revoked by the board or discharged, shall have the like effect as a distringas for the same purposes served upon the said governor and company or other company; but any such order may be discharged by the Court of Chancery or a judge thereof, who may make the like order in relation thereto as in the case of an application to discharge a distringas.

35. Indemnity to the Bank and others.

36. It shall not be lawful for any trustees, or persons acting in the management of a charity, to grant, without the approval of the board, any lease of the charity lands in reversion after more than three years of any existing lease, or for any term of life, or in consideration, wholly or in part, of any fine.

37. So much of sect. 21 of the principal act as requires a compulsory provision to be inserted in every mortgage for the payment of the principal money borrowed by annual instalments, and for the redemption and reconveyance of the mortgaged estates within the period of not more than thirty years, is hereby repealed; but the board authorising any mortgage to be made of any charity estate may, by the same or any other order, direct the trustees of the charity to discharge the principal debt, or any part thereof, by equal yearly instalments, within thirty years from the date of the security, or to form an accumulation or sinking fund out of the income of the charity for discharging the principal debt, or any portion thereof, within the same period, and may give any directions as to the investment and accumulation of such fund, and the trustees for the time being of the charity shall carry such order into effect.

38. Extension of power of board as to compromise of claims.

39. Board may authorise partitions of charity estates.

40. Board may authorise payments for equality of exchange or partition.

41. Exchanges or partitions authorised to be made by order of the board as under the General Inclosure Act. In case of church land, consent of ordinary and patron is required.

42. Public notice to be given of exchange and partitions.

43. Power to ascertain lands charged with rents to charities.

44. Expenses of exchanges and partitions, and determining application of charges.

45. Incorporated charities, and trustees for charities, may, with consent of board, re-invest in land.

46. Order of board for investments to be carried into effect, and costs to be raised.

47. All leases, sales, exchanges, partitions, and transactions authorised by the board under the principal act or this act shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding any prior disabling act applicable to the specific charity.

48. Power to refer bills of costs in charity matters to taxation.

49. Sect. 27 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, shall be construed and operate as if the words "and the trustees of the charity shall be legally authorised to purchase and hold such land" had been omitted therefrom; and incorporated trustees of any charity shall be competent to purchase and hold lands for the purposes mentioned in the same section without license in mortmain.

50. Deeds, wills, and documents relating to charities may be inrolled at the office of the board, and copies of inrolment to be evidence.

51. Office of the commissioners substituted for the office of registrar of county courts judgments, for the purposes of sect. 55 of principal act.

52. Sect. 61 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, except so much thereof as enacts that the trustees or persons acting in the administration of every charity shall, in books to be kept by them for that purpose, regularly enter or cause to be entered full and true accounts of all money received and paid respectively on account of such charity, shall be repealed as to all accounts which such trustees or administrators shall not have been bound to render before the passing of this act; and the trustees or administrators of every charity shall, on or before the 25th March in every year, or such other day as may be fixed for that purpose by the board, or as may have been already fixed for rendering the accounts thereof required by the principal act, prepare and make out the following accounts in relation thereto; that is to say,

- (1). An account of the endowments of the charity, shewing, in the case of realty not in hand, the manner in which the same is let or occupied, and in the case of personality, the existing investment or employment thereof, and in what names such investments are made, and shewing the gross income arising or which ought to have arisen from the said endowments during the year ending on the 31st December then next preceding, or on such other day as may have been fixed by the board in this behalf;
- (2). An account of all balances in hand at the commencement of the year, and of all monies received during the same year on account of the charity, with the dates of such receipts, and a statement of deductions and allowances, if any, from the gross amount;
- (3). A particular account for the same period of all payments, with the dates of such payments;
- (4). An account of all monies owing to or from the charity: Which accounts shall be certified under the hand of one or more of the said trustees or administrators, and shall be audited by the auditor of the charity, if any; and the said trustees or administrators shall, within fourteen days after the day appointed for making out such accounts, deliver or transmit, free of charge, one copy thereof to the commissioners at their office in London, and one copy thereof to the clerk of the county court or each county court within the district of which the charity is applicable; or where the charity is applicable in the districts of more than one county court, then to the clerk or clerks of such one or more of the same courts as the board may direct; and where the charity is applicable in the city of London or the liberties thereof, or any adjoining precincts or extra-parochial places not within the jurisdiction of a county court, then to the clerk of the Sheriff's Court of London having jurisdiction under the provisions of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852; and every copy received by the clerk of any county court, or of such last-mentioned court, of such accounts, shall be kept and registered by him without fee or reward, and shall be open to the inspection of all persons at all seasonable hours, on payment of 1s. for every inspection; and any person may require a copy of every such account, or of any part thereof, on paying therefor to the clerk in whose custody it shall be after the rate of 2d. for every seventy-two words or figures.

53. Board may make orders as to delivery and publication of account by trustees, and as to the form thereof.

54. Trustees wilfully omitting to make returns of account to be deemed guilty of a contempt of Court of Chancery.

55. What to be evidence of wilful omission.

56. Exemption of charities supported by voluntary contributions not to extend to real estate and permanent investments belonging to them.

57. Provision enabling members of exempted charities to submit disputes to commissioners extended to other charities.

58. Amendment of interpretation clause.

59. Short title.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

Recently published, in 12mo., price 14s. cloth.

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS OF 1852 AND 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb., 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

MITFORD ON PLEADING.

Fifth Edition.—In royal 8vo., price 10s. boards.

A TREATISE ON PLEADINGS IN SUITS IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY by English Bill. By JOHN MITFORD, Esq. (the late LORD REDESDALE). The Fifth Edition, comprising a Large Body of Additional Notes, by JOSIAH W. SMITH, B.C.L., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law, Editor of Fearn's Contingent Reminders, and Author of a Treatise on Executory Interests.

Stevens & Norton, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

In royal 8vo., price 2l. 2s. boards, vol. 2 of

SPENCE ON THE EQUITABLE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY: comprising EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS; their Nature, Qualities, and Incidents; in which is incorporated, so far as relates to those Subjects, the substance of "MADDOCK'S PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY." By GEORGE SPENCE, Esq., Q.C.

* Vol. 1 may be had, price 1l. 11s. 6d. boards.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the ipsissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate. . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend, could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with whose details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this results the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once trite and recherche, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resumes of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on, the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 5, 1855.

THE doctrine that an agent cannot be permitted to set up the jus tertii against his principal, or to dispute his title, is to be found frequently repeated in the text-books and in numerous decided cases; but in none of them is the principle on which the rule is founded clearly defined, so as to afford a distinct guide to the limits within which its practical application must be confined, and much confusion exists upon the subject. This may be in some measure accounted for by the infinite variety of circumstances attending mercantile transactions, which renders it difficult to define the extent to which the principle is properly applicable; but in some instances, at least, the rule appears to be stated too generally.

Mr. Justice Story, in his work on Agency, sect. 217, says, "An agent is not ordinarily permitted to set up the adverse title of a third person to defeat the rights of his principal, against his own manifest obligations to him, or to dispute his title. If, therefore, he has received goods from his principal, and has agreed to hold them subject to his order, or to sell them for him, and to account for the proceeds, he will not be allowed to set up the adverse title of a third person to the same goods to defeat his obligations*. An exception, however, is allowed where the principal has obtained the goods fraudulently or tortiously from such third person. (Hardman v. Wilcock, 9 Bing. 382)." And in a note to the above passage he says, "We are carefully to distinguish those cases where the suit is brought by the principal from those where the suit is brought by a third person, claiming the property against the agent. The rights of the latter to maintain the suit are not affected by anything that has passed between the principal and agent. If such third person has a good title to the goods, he may recover them, notwithstanding the bailment. (See Ogle v. Atkinson, 5 Taunt. 789; Wilson v. Anderton, 1 B. & Ad. 450; and Story on Bailments, s. 102). There is a dictum in Ogle v. Atkinson, by Gibbs, C. J., which contradicts the text, in which he refers to a point made, that the defendants (the agents) cannot refuse to deliver up the goods to the plaintiff, (the principal), from whom they received them; and then he says, 'But if the property is in others, I think that they (the agents) may set up this defence.' This dictum has since been treated as untenable. (See Gosling v. Birnie, 7 Bing. 339; Paley on Agency, by Lloyd, 80, 81, and note, Id. 53)." In the above passages, and again in Story on Bailments, ss. 450, 582, Mr. Justice Story lays down the rule broadly, that, except in cases where the principal has obtained the goods fraudulently or tortiously from the real owner, the agent cannot set up as a defence to an action by his principal for the goods, that they in fact belong to a third person, and have been claimed by him. He treats the dictum of Gibbs, C. J., as untenable, and assumes, that although the goods may have been duly claimed by a third party, who is in fact the real owner, and to whom the agent would be liable in an action, yet, in cases other than those above excepted, the agent cannot, in an action by his principal, set up the title and claim of such third party. The rule, as above stated, would lead to this palpable injustice, that the agent might, without any laches on his part, be liable, on the one hand, to an action by the real owner, if he refuse to deliver the goods to him; and, on the other to an action by his principal, if he comply with the real owner's demand, or refuse to deal with the goods according to the directions of his principal; and from this dilemma the agent would have no means of escape; for he cannot, after notice of the real owner's claim and demand, duly made by him, defend himself from such claim by delivering the goods to the person from whom he received them, the refusal to deliver to the owner on demand being evidence of a conversion. (Per Tenterden, C. J., in Wilson v. Anderson, 1 B. & Ad. 456). Neither could he, if Mr. Justice Story's position be correct, discharge himself by a delivery to the true owner, except where the principal obtained the goods fraudulently or tortiously, for that position is based on the assumption that the agent is estopped from shewing that his principal was not entitled. Further: in such a case, if the real owner claims by title paramount to that of the principal, the agent cannot interplead; for, as between principal and agent, the latter is entitled to an interpleader order only where the adverse claimant relies on a title derived from the principal, and not upon a title paramount. (Crawshaw v. Thornton, 2 My. & C. 23). An interpleader order will be granted only in those cases in which the party seeking to compel the several claimants to interplead is under no liability to either of them beyond that which arises from the title to the property in contest, and the whole rights of the rival claimants can be determined by the litigation between them; (Id. 19); but an agent, receiving goods for or on account of his principal, incurs a personal liability to him, and may by his own acts have rendered himself liable to his principal independently of the question of title—as by agreeing to hold the goods for his principal after notice of the adverse claim, (Gosling v. Birnie, 7 Bing. 339), or by putting the principal in a position to incur a liability, which he did incur in consequence of the agent agreeing to hold the goods on his behalf. (Hawes v. Watson, 2 B. & Cr. 541). In these cases, if a third party claim under a title paramount to that of the principal, no litigation between the claimants could ascertain their respective rights as against the agent; and the order to interplead, by staying any action by the principal against the agent, might deprive him of part of his legal right, without affording him any equivalent compensation. The Courts will not, upon an application for an interpleader order, try the question, whether or not such circumstances, giving the principal a right independently of the right to the property in the goods, exist*, but will leave the agent to plead the title and claim of the third party to the action brought against him by his principal. (Per Alderson, B., in Horton v. The Earl of Devon, 4 Exch. 499).

It is submitted, however, that the meaning of the dictum of Gibbs, C. J., in Ogle v. Atkinson, that the agent may set up property in others against his principal, is, not that an agent may of his own mere motion set up the title of a third person, without any demand having been made by him, but that ordinarily the mere fact that a party has received, or agreed to hold, goods as the agent of another, will not preclude him from setting up, in answer to a claim by his principal, that the goods really belong to a third person, and have been duly demanded by him; and that to this extent, and in the absence of any special circumstances beyond the mere fact of the agency—as that the agreement to hold for the principal was made after notice of the adverse claim, or that the principal was induced by such agreement to incur some liability, or otherwise alter his position—the above dictum is sound, and is not overruled by or inconsistent with any of the authorities cited by Mr. Justice Story. There is, indeed, one case cited by Mr. Erskine, arguendo, in Laclough v. Towle, (3 Esp. 115), as having been decided by Gould, J., to the effect that a carrier, who has received goods from the plaintiff to carry, which were afterwards claimed by a third person, with whom the carrier agreed that upon receiving an indemnity he would retain the goods, and would not deliver them according to the orders of his principal, could not be permitted to set up any question of property out of the plaintiff, and was precluded from shewing a property in any other person; and Lord Kenyon admitted the authority of the case cited as law. But this decision at Nisi Prius was previous to the dictum in Ogle v. Atkinson, and was explained and distinguished by Littledale, J., in his judgment in Wilson v. Anderson, which strongly supports the position laid down by Gibbs, C. J. The action was by the real owner of goods against an agent, into whose custody they had been delivered by a third person; and Littledale, J., commenting on the case before Gould, J., said, "There the carrier, on the goods being demanded by a third party, voluntarily identified himself with that party, by proposing to retain them on an indemnity, and offering to set up the title of that party in an action by the bailor. Now, a lessee cannot dispute the title of his lessor at the time of the lease, but he may shew that the lessor's title has been put an end to; and therefore, in an action of covenant by the lessor, a plea of eviction by title paramount, or that which is equivalent to it, is a good plea, and a threat to distrain, or bring an ejectment, by a person having good title, would be equivalent to an actual eviction." So here, if the bailor brought an action against the defendant as bailee, the latter might, on the same principle, shew that the plaintiff recovered the value of the goods, or that, on being threatened with an action by a person who had good title to the goods, he had delivered them to him."

Now, if shewing a valid title in a third person, and a delivery to him under the threat of an action, would, as stated by Littledale, J., constitute an answer to the action, it is difficult to see why the title of the third party, and a demand by him, should not also be an answer; in the former, as in the latter, the strict rule that the agent cannot shew title in another is broken in upon; in neither case can the agent shew a good defence unless he proves that the third party has, in fact, a valid title to the goods; and as, in order to complete his defence, where actual delivery has not been made to the owner, he must shew a demand by him, the defence does not appear to be open to the objection that the agent may be seeking to defeat his principal's claim in order to retain the goods for his own benefit.

* Crawshaw v. Thornton, (2 My. & C. 1); Dalton v. The Midland Railway Company, (12 C. B. 462, per Jervis, C. J.)

The agent, unless indemnified by the claimant, would reasonably desire to retain the goods in his possession until the action by his principal against him is decided; for if he fail to prove the claimant has a valid title, he must deliver up the goods, or their value, to his principal; and the difficulty and hardship of his position would be materially increased, if, notwithstanding he acted upon the bona fide belief that the claimant had a good title, and that therefore he was liable to him, yet he could not set up this liability as a defence against an action by his principal without delivering the goods to the claimant, and incurring the additional risk attending such delivery. We will now proceed to consider the cases cited by Mr. Justice Story. In Harmas v. Anderson, (2 Camp. 243), the purchaser of goods, having obtained from the seller an order for their delivery, lodged it with the warehouseman in whose possession the goods were, and the latter transferred them in his books into the name of the purchaser, and debited him with warehouse rent. The purchaser afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignees claimed the goods, but the defendant delivered them back to the seller; and the Court held, that the transfer into the purchaser's name was tantamount to a complete delivery as between the vender and vendee; the right to stop in transitu was therefore gone, and the warehouseman became the agent of and trustee for the purchaser; the plaintiffs, his assignees, were, in fact, the real owners of the goods, and the seller, whose title the defendant set up, had no valid claim. So, in Stoward v. Dunkin, (2 Camp. 344), the defendant, a warehouseman, on receiving an order from the seller of a quantity of malt to hold it on account of the plaintiff, who advanced 7500*l.* on the security of the malt, gave a written acknowledgment that he so held it; the seller became bankrupt, and his assignees having claimed the malt, the defendant refused to deliver it to the plaintiff, on the ground that by the custom of the malt trade the property in the malt was not transferred until it was remeasured. Lord Ellenborough said, "It is clear the defendant cannot say to the plaintiff, 'The malt is not yours,' after acknowledging to hold it on his account." It will be observed, that in this case the seller, by giving the order to hold the malt on account of the plaintiff, had done all that was necessary on his part to cause the due transfer of the malt to the plaintiff, and the defendant was endeavouring to set up his own omission to do what was necessary to enable him to comply with the seller's order to transfer the malt, in opposition to his written acknowledgment to the plaintiff that he had so transferred the malt, and held it for him.

In Hawes v. Watson, (2 B. & Cr. 540), A. sold to B. a quantity of tallow then lying at the defendants' wharf, and on the same day gave to B. a written order on the defendants to weigh, deliver, and transfer the tallow: the tallow was not subsequently weighed, but B. resold it to the plaintiff, and obtained from the defendants, and handed to the plaintiff, a written acknowledgment that they had transferred the tallow to the plaintiff's account; the plaintiff thereupon gave B. his acceptance for the price of the tallow. B. stopped payment, and A. gave the defendants notice not to deliver the tallow to B.'s order, on the ground, that as it had not been weighed, the property had not passed to him. The Court held that A., by the order to weigh, transfer, and deliver, had enabled B. to resell the tallow, and the defendants having sent to the plaintiff an acknowledgment that they had transferred it to his account, they thereforth held the tallow as his agents; the possession thereof had passed to him, and the right of A. to stop in transitu was gone. Here, again, the plaintiff (the principal) was in fact the real owner, and A., whose title the defendants set up, had no valid claim. In this case, too, the plaintiff had, in consequence of the agents' (the defendants') acknowledgment, incurred a liability on his acceptance; and the Court relied also on this circumstance.

So, in Hell v. Griffin, (10 Bing. 246), the owner of goods, upon an advance of money by the plaintiff, handed to him a wharfinger's receipt for certain goods, together with the invoice, and at the same time directed the defendant, to whose wharf the goods were then in transitu, to deliver them on their arrival to the plaintiff. This the defendant promised the plaintiff to do. The goods afterwards arrived; and in an action of trover, the sole question was, whether the property in the goods had passed to the plaintiff, so as to entitle him to sue in trover; and the Court held that it had. Here, too, the principal suing was held to be the real owner. And it should be further observed, that in this case there was no claim by any third person at all, but the defendant was seeking of his own mere motion, without any adverse claim, to defeat the right which he had acknowledged in the plaintiff.

In Kirwan v. Sanders (6 Ad. & El. 515), the defendant had sold goods to the plaintiff as the sole purchaser, and received payment from him; the defendant apprised the warehouseman in whose hands the goods were of the sale, and ordered him to weigh the goods, which had been done, and the goods transferred into the name of the plaintiff in the warehouseman's books. Afterwards the defendant ordered the warehouseman to detain the goods, on the ground that one M. was interested in the goods as a joint purchaser, and that M.'s assignees had given the defendant notice not to part with the goods. In trover against the defendant, he proposed to prove the above statements; but the Court held, that the goods having been transferred in the usual way, the sale and delivery to the plaintiff was complete, and that therefore the defendant had no longer any right to detain the goods. Patteson, J., said, "The defendant, when he received notice from the assignees, should have said, 'It is too late; I have transferred the goods.'" This was not the case of an agent setting up the title of a third person against his principal, but a vendor seeking to detain the goods from the purchaser with whom he dealt, after a transfer, which amounted to a delivery to him.

It will be observed, too, that neither in this, nor in any of the four cases previously commented on, was the defendant (the agent) liable to be sued for the goods by the third party, whose title he set up. Gelling v. Birnie (7 Bing. 339) is the case more especially relied upon by Mr. Justice Story as overruling the dictum of Gibbs, C. J. In that case A. had purchased timber of B., and paid part of the purchase money. B. sent the timber to the defendant's wharf, and apprised him that it had been sold to A., who marked the whole of it, and paid to the defendant 18*l.* 9*s.* due from B. to the defendant for the cartage of the timber. Afterwards B. gave A. notice that unless he paid the balance of the purchase money the next day he should resell the timber; and he accordingly resold it to the plaintiff, and gave a written order to the defendant to deliver the timber to him upon payment of 18*l.* 9*s.* for the cartage. The defendant, upon receiving the order and the 18*l.* 9*s.*, said to the plaintiff, "Very well, I will hold the timber for you;" and afterwards delivered to the plaintiff a bill for wharfrage, saying, "These are the only charges on your timber." A. afterwards paid the balance of the purchase money to B. In trover by the plaintiff for the timber, the defendant set up as a defence that the timber belonged to A., but it does not appear from the report that any claim or demand of the timber had been made by A. of the defendant. Bozanquet and Parke, JJ., it is true, likened the case to Steward v. Dunbin and Hawes v. Watson, the circumstances of which, on examination, will be found to be very different; but Lord Tenterden, C. J., and Park and Alderson, JJ., all relied on the fact that the defendant had agreed to hold the timber for the plaintiff with full knowledge of the circumstances of the previous sale to A., and without any mention of A. to the plaintiff; and Alderson, J., decided the case entirely on this ground, saying, "The defendant has repeatedly acknowledged the title of the plaintiff, with a full knowledge of the transaction as to the contract with A. Under these circumstances he cannot afterwards be allowed to dispute that title on grounds with which he was fully acquainted when he made the admissions."

In Dixon v. Hamond (2 B. & Al. 410) the defendant, an assurance broker, effected an assurance as agent for two partners, A. and B., on a ship the property of A., and charged them with the premiums. The ship was lost, and the underwriters paid the amount of the assurance to the defendant as agent for A. and B., for whom the policy had been effected. A. died, and B. became bankrupt; and in an action by the assignees of B., the surviving partner, for money had and received by the defendant to the use of A. and B., the defendant set up that he was accountable only to the executors of A., to whom the ship belonged. Abbott, C.J., said, "The legal title to the ship has nothing to do with this question." Bayley, J., said, "Here the defendant effected an assurance for both A. and B., and the underwriters paid the amount to him as the agent of both partners; then he must pay it over according to his duty as agent, viz. to the partnership." And Holroyd, J., said the money, though paid to the defendant, was the money of the partnership.

In Roberts v. Ogilby (9 Price, 269) the defendants had, as agents for the plaintiff, and by his directions, insured, on his account only, a vessel of which he was part owner, and had received the amount from the underwriters as his agents. Other parties interested in the vessel afterwards gave them notice not to pay over the money so received to the plaintiff; and in an action by the plaintiff for money had and received to his use, the defendants set up that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue alone, being part owner only. As observed by Richards, C. B., "There was no privity between the other owners and the defendants. There was nothing out of which the other owners could make a claim against the defendants, whatever they might do against the plaintiff." And the Court held, that as the defendants were employed by the plaintiff alone, and as his agents recovered the money from the underwriters, they received it to his use, and must account to him for it. Neither in Dixon v. Hamond nor Roberts v. Ogilby had the parties whose title was set up by the defendants, the agents, any valid claim against them; in neither of them was there any such privity of contract between the adverse claimants and the agents who received the money as would enable such claimants to maintain an action against the agents for money had and received to their use; and it should be borne in mind that there is this distinction between goods and money, as to the liability of an agent to third persons—with respect to the former, the real owner may, without any privity between him and the defendant, recover in trover by virtue of his property in and right to the possession of the specific goods; but with respect to the latter, (unless, indeed, the money be in a bag or earmarked, so that the particular coin can be identified, in which case trover will lie), the plaintiff can recover only by reason of some contract, express or implied by law, to hold the money to the plaintiff's use; and although a privity of contract may be implied in many cases where the defendant has in the first instance improperly received money, yet, in the case of money received by an agent on account of his principal, he is accountable to that principal, and to him alone, though the principal may himself be answerable over to a third party, and there is no sufficient privity of contract in such case between the agent who received and the party ultimately entitled to the money to enable the latter to sue the agent. (Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ad. 364; Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582; Baron v. Hubbard, 4 B. & Ad. 611). The recent case of Tassell v. Cooper (9 C. B. 509) was decided on the same principle as Dixon v. Hamond and Roberts v. Ogilby, namely, that the money having been received by the defendant from and for the use of the plaintiff, as between them the money was the plaintiff's, and he was liable to account to him, and to him alone. Of White v. Bartlett (9 Bing. 378) it is sufficient to say that it was not a case of an agent setting up the title of a third party, or disputing that of his principal. Hardman v. Wilcock (9 Bing. 382) was no doubt decided upon the ground that there the principal had obtained the goods fraudulently; and the Court relied upon this as distinguishing the case from some of those already alluded to, and seemed to assume that but for such fraud the title of the principal could not have been questioned; but it was not necessary to consider or decide that point, nor was it much argued.

Tenant v. Elliott, (1 B. & P. 3); Farmer v. Russell, (Id. 296); Bousfield v. Wilson, (16 M. & W. 185); and Bettleley v. Reed, (4 Q. B. 5, 11, 17), simply decide that an agent, who has received money or goods for his principal, cannot set up, in answer to an action by the principal to recover such money or goods, that the money was paid to him, the agent, by, or the goods were received by him from, a third party, under an illegal contract between the latter and the principal, the third party himself not having taken the objection—a point on which the Court laid some stress in the decision of these cases. In Betteley v. Reed, Lord Denman, C. J., in giving judgment, said, “To allow a depository of goods or money, who has acknowledged the title of one person, to set up the title of another who makes no claim, or has abandoned all claim, would enable the depository to keep for himself that to which he does not pretend to have any title himself.” Nicholson v. Knowles, (5 Mad. 47); Crawshaw v. Thornton, (7 Sim. 391; 2 My. & C. 1); Paterni v. Campbell, (12 M. & W. 278); Dalton v. The Midland Railway Company, (12 C. B. 458); and Horton v. The Earl of Devon, (4 Exch. 497), were all cases in which the only point decided was, that the agent was not entitled to compel his principal, and the third party claiming the property, to interplead; and it may well be that it would be a hardship on the principal to compel him to interplead, and simply to try the question of property with the adverse claimant, for that would deprive him of the benefit of any circumstances, beyond the mere fact of the agency, which might entitle him to recover against the agent independently of the question of the title to the property in contest; and it was upon this principle that the above cases were decided. But there is no such hardship in permitting the agent to plead, in answer to the action by his principal, the title and claim of the third party; for if any special circumstances exist which, as between the principal and his agent, entitle the former to maintain his action, independently of the mere question of title to the property in dispute, the principal may rely on these circumstances in reply, as an estoppel in pais to the agent’s defence of title in and claim by the third party. It is submitted, therefore, that all which the cases shew is, that an agent cannot for his own benefit, and in cases in which he is not liable to any third party by whom a claim has been made, dispute the title of his principal; nor can he do so when by his conduct, with a full knowledge of the adverse claim, or by wilfully inducing the principal to alter his position, he has estopped himself from disputing his liability to his principal; but that where the agent is liable to a third party by whom a claim has been made, the agent may, in the absence of any special circumstances beyond the mere fact of the agency, shew the title and claim of such third party in answer to an action by his principal.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A RULE NISI has been granted (May 1) in Mr. Barber’s case. Lord Campbell, C. J., said, “In the case of William Henry Barber, we have looked at the affidavits, and we think there ought to be a rule to shew cause. It is granted upon this express understanding, only in respect of any new matter that can be shewn to be disclosed by the affidavits. When the matter was a second time before the Court, and we refused the rule to shew cause, we gave a clear intimation that it was to be considered as final. In spite of this, we, being now told that there is new matter since discovered, gave permission to the application being renewed, but it was upon the express condition that it should be confined to matter subsequently discovered. The leave was accepted upon that condition, and when cause comes to be shewn, we wish it to be understood that it is to be argued upon the ground, whether there be new matter disclosed by the affidavits which ought to alter the opinion we before formed and expressed.”

In the House of Lords, during a debate commenced by the Bishop of Exeter upon church rates, the Lord Chancellor and Lord Campbell, C. J., concurred in opinion, that under the present state of the law there is no mode by which the making of a church rate can be enforced, although, when made, payment of it can be compelled. The old remedies, by way of excommunication and interdict, are obsolete.

The same noble and learned Peers have expressed their opinions that soldiers need not be sent out of an assize town during the assizes, as has lately been the practice.

Mr. Bright, in the House of Commons, alluded to the case of Baranelli, the murderer, and stated that a medical witness was in court, having been subpoenaed by the prosecution, but it having been learned that his opinion was to the effect that the prisoner was insane, he was not called by the counsel for the Crown. He then asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it was the custom of counsel for the Crown to take such advantage of prisoners placed in critical and desperate circumstances; and whether it was not the duty of counsel, in a case of this kind, to adduce all the evidence, in order that a prisoner might have every chance for his life which the law fairly gave him? Sir George Grey declined giving any opinion of his own on the subject, but stated that the learned judge (Mr. Justice Erle) who tried the prisoner did not think that the counsel had acted improperly, that the medical witness could have been called for the prisoner, and that his testimony had been brought to the notice of the judge.—This is a matter of great importance, and deserving of serious consideration by the Profession as well as by the public. Some discretion must be left with the prosecuting counsel; if he be judicious, and at the same time honourable and humane, he will not abuse it.

The first report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the state of the County Courts, and the course of practice therein, has been published in the form of a large blue book. We shall shortly consider its suggestions.

In Lewis v. Bright the Court of Queen’s Bench (April 28) decided, that although by the stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, any contract made in the way of trade by a spiritual person holding a benefice is void, yet by the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 31, such contract, if entered into, may be enforced against the clergyman. The first statute is to prevent him from trading, the latter to prevent him from being dishonest.

The same Court has also decided, in Esposito v. Bowden, (April 28), that the mere declaration of war did not justify the owner of a neutral vessel in not proceeding to Odessa and taking a cargo on board there pursuant to the charterparty. Circumstances could be supposed which would have rendered it possible for the contract to have been legally performed.

INROLMENT OF ANNUITIES.—We are much obliged to two of our correspondents who have called our attention to the fact that the Annuity Inrolment Acts are repealed by the late act 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, which also repeals the Usury Laws. This should have been noticed in the review of Mr. Bunyon’s work on Life Assurance in our last number.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Rickard Deasy, Esq., Dublin, one of her Majesty’s Counsel, for the county of Cork, in the room of Edmund Burke Roche, Esq., who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty’s Chiltern Hundreds.

Reviews.

The Law of Mining, Banking, Assurance, and General Joint-stock Companies, not requiring express Authority of Parliament. By CHARLES WORDSWORTH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Sixth Edition.

[Benning & Co., 1854.]

MR. WORDSWORTH has long been known as an author in connexion with the subject of joint-stock companies, having been the first person to write a distinct treatise upon it. This was about nineteen years ago, when, we believe, a pamphlet by the late Mr. Genge, and a chapter in Collyer on Partnership, constituted the "joint stock" of information upon the matter. But so greatly has this branch of law increased during the interval, that Mr. Wordsworth has found it necessary to divide his one moderate volume of former days into two stout royal octavos, each, however, being distinct and complete in itself. One is devoted to companies requiring the express authority of Parliament—e. g. railway companies; the other (now before us) to companies not requiring such powers. "The distinction thus referred to," he says, "will at once be understood, by stating that a railway, or water, or other such like company must obtain what is called a special act before it can be established; whereas a banking company or a general joint-stock company needs no such special power, but is formed by deed of settlement, in conjunction with provisions of certain general statutes passed with the object of regulating all such associations."

The treatise of Mr. Wordsworth has always been of much practical utility, both to the legal profession and also to that large portion of the community who are more or less interested in companies. If this may be affirmed of the earlier, much more may it be said of the later editions, which have increased in importance together with the body of law on which they are based, and have been more and more carefully elaborated by their author.

The plan of the volume before us embraces the registration of companies under the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, together with all its incidents; directors, and their duties; shareholders, their rights and liabilities; contracts, calls, and the transfer and charging of shares; banking companies under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113; mining and assurance companies; companies under charters or letters-patent, incorporated by act of Parliament, or empowered to sue and be sued; proceedings at law and in equity by and against companies, (including proceedings against provisional committeemen); bankruptcy, dissolution, and winding-up of companies; and illegal companies. The appendix also contains the leading statutes, and the principal forms in use with reference to these subjects.

Mr. Wordsworth directed public attention to partnerships with limited liability as far back as 1840, when he published some remarks on the "société en commandite." These remarks are republished in the preface, and we proceed to transcribe some of them, as just now possessing a peculiar interest:—

"Great advantage would result to the community if the maximum of prudence, intelligence, and vigilance could be united with an unlimited amount of capital; but the English law of partnership stands in the way of such union, by recognising no medium between the full responsibility of an ordinary partnership and the irresponsibility of an incorporated company."

"The laws of France and of many other countries, including most of the American States, recognise a species of partnership which fulfils the above condition, besides the ordinary partnership, or partnership

'under a collective title, (société en nom collectif), which is precisely our partnership; and besides the anonymous partnership, (société anonyme), which is similar to our chartered company, and which requires only a royal decree or ordonnance to enjoy a legal existence. There is a third description of partnership of limited liability, called a 'société en commandite,' which partakes of the character of the two former, and therefore has a tendency to effect that union of skill and capital without which enterprises requiring a high degree of both cannot be undertaken; of the present state of the French law of partnership, as far as regards the 'société en commandite, we shall give a short exposition."

"Commandite* associations consist of two or more individuals, of whom one or more undertake the management, and are held indefinitely responsible for all engagements, as in the case of ordinary partnerships; and the others are mere shareholders, responsible only to the amount of their contributions, either paid up, or contracted to be paid (qu'ils ont versé ou promis de verser) into the joint stock of the association. The first, called 'commandites,' may be designated managing partners; the second, called 'commanditaires,' non-responsible shareholders, or simply shareholders."

"When there are several responsible partners, (commandites), the association, as between them and the public, is an ordinary partnership; but as between the non-responsible shareholders and the public, it is a privileged company."

"It is an essential condition of this species of trading association that the non-responsible stockholder (commanditaire) take no part in the management. If he perform any act of management, (acte de gestion), his responsibility ceases to be confined to the amount of his contribution; he becomes liable indefinitely for all the engagements of the association; in other words, he makes himself a responsible partner. He ceases to be a commanditaire, and becomes a commandite."

"This rule is without exception. A shareholder cannot be employed by the association, even by power of attorney; and it seems to be a corollary from the same rule, that a clerk or servant cannot become a shareholder without incurring the full responsibility of a managing partner."

"In order to constitute a commandite association, it is necessary that in the deed of association it be agreed that such and such of the associates be excluded from management, and that their risk be limited to the amount of their respective contributions. According to Pardessus, the ablest French writer on commercial law, this need not be stated in express terms, no other explanation being necessary than that such and such are non-responsible shareholders; that expression being deemed sufficient, 'without the periphrasis which it would otherwise be necessary to employ.'

"The law of France does not require that the deed (l'acte) of association be published. It may, like an ordinary deed of partnership, be executed in private; but it is imperatively necessary that an extract be published, stating that among the associates there are so many shareholders of limited responsibility, but without indicating their names. The 'extract' must also announce in what sums, or in what species of

* "The term 'commandite' is not translatable, but it will be seen what it implies. The term is retained because it does not include any ideas likely to interfere with the conception which it is desirable to convey of the various provisions of the law. For the same reason the term 'association' is preferred to that of 'partnership.' The term 'partnership' connotes the idea of liability; and to call this species of association a partnership of limited liability would extend the idea of limitation further than the facts warrant. On these grounds the phrase 'commandite association' is used."

'property, (objects), their contributions consist, and whether they have been paid up, or still remain to be paid up. If the publication of the 'extract' be neglected, the association is deemed an ordinary partnership. (Pardessus, tom. 4ème, p. 118).

"This communication is deemed by Pardessus of the highest importance, as it is the only mode of informing third parties, who deal with the association, that in addition to the personal responsibility of the managing partners, the capital of the association is composed of such and such sums, of which a creditor can demand payment of the shareholders, unless these latter can prove that they have already paid up the whole amount of their contributions. A false annunciation is deemed an act of swindling, and is punishable as such."

In the chapter on Mining Companies, the author, after an able argument in support of his views, arrives at the conclusion that a "cost-book mining partnership" may be established elsewhere than in Cornwall, and is not required to be constituted according to the requirements of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, on the ground that at common law parties may form a partnership in any manner they may think proper or find it convenient to adopt; that such right can be taken away only by express words in a statute; and that no such express language is used in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

Some of the main points of difference between a mining company by deed, and one under cost-book regulations, are thus stated, (p. 193):—

"1. In a 'cost-book' partnership a shareholder may get rid of his shares, and with them his liabilities, as far as his partners are concerned, without their consent, either by transfer or simple relinquishment, provided the cost-book regulations do not prescribe against such a course: in the former case, the fact of transfer being entered by the purser in the cost-book; and in the latter, by giving notice to the purser of his having so relinquished his shares and all his claims upon the mine.

"2. There being a purser or manager of the mine, all acts are in general done by him, such as ordering the supply of the necessary materials for working the mine, hiring of labour, &c.; and a shareholder has no power to bind his co-shareholders by any contract for materials, &c. not necessary, nor for money lent, nor upon bills of exchange; not has the purser, for money lent or upon bills of exchange.

"3. The rules are simple, and all the concerns of the partnership are entered in the cost-book; and all the shareholders meet and order their general affairs, without the assistance of any directing body, and consider and resolve upon the purser's reports made to them at their meetings, which are seldom at greater intervals than two months. Sometimes there is a committee of management in a cost-book mine; but they are only appointed from general meeting to general meeting, have no power to make calls or declare dividends, and all their acts are subject to the review of a general meeting.

"4. The mode of transferring shares is simple, and effected with greater facility, and in any form; and the mere entry by the purser in the 'cost-book' of the fact of transfer is sufficient to bind all parties, and constitute the introduction of a new partner into the concern.

"Whereas, in joint-stock companies under deed of settlement, the directors are the principal actors, and the shareholders have no power, except by coming to a vote on certain limited matters; and even then their will is to be carried into execution by the directors. So, likewise, they cannot at their own pleasure retire from the concern, but must have the consent of the directors for that purpose—a power of the utmost importance in a failing concern. Moreover, the form of making a transfer, and getting it registered, so as to determine the shareholder's liability, is more complicated and dilatory.

"It must, however, be understood, that in making this contrast between a cost-book mine and one formed under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, the cost-book regulations in their ordinary form only have been kept in view. They may, of course, be so framed as to give them a more stringent character; but in doing so care must be taken not to encroach upon the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, so as to make the partnership a joint-stock company within the meaning of the statute. But one point should always be carefully borne in mind with respect to a mining company constituted by deed, viz. that the purser or manager of any such mining company, if established for the working of mines in Cornwall, may have an implied authority to bind the company, from the nature of his office and the custom of mining adventures in that county, for things necessary for the working of the mines, however stringent the deed itself may be in the express authority given to him; unless, indeed, it be shewn by the company that the creditor had notice of the limit imposed upon his authority—which proof lies upon them to give—for the stipulations of the deed are otherwise only binding upon the shareholders inter se."

The chapter on banking will be found useful to the great interests affected by its legal incidents, while that devoted to the winding up of companies is especially full and complete.

The Common-law Procedure Act, 1854; with Explanatory Notes and Index; together with an Appendix, containing the General Rules of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and the Schedule of Forms. By JOSEPH PHILIPS, Esq., M.A., of the Inner Temple, Special Pleader. [Benning & Co.]

ANOTAM is now added to the list of books upon the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854. No statute ever wrought greater changes in the old and established mode of common-law procedure, and we may safely say that no statute ever produced a greater number of learned authors ready to expound and illustrate its objects and intent. These observations are not made by way of complaint. The subject that has called forth these various emanations of legal authorship is important, and the demand for the ipsissima verba of the statute, as well as such comments as may tend to illustrate its meaning, must be as varied as it is great. Tastes, means, and purposes are all to be consulted. One may desire the two statutes, 1852 and 1854, under one roof; another, treatises on the principles of injunction, inspection, or specific performance; and again, a third may rest satisfied with a small book confined to the statute of 1854, easily carried in the pocket, and procurable at a very moderate price. Under the latter description comes Mr. Philips's little work, which is comprised within ninety-eight pages. The sections of the act are interspersed with short yet comprehensive notes. Mr. Philips has adopted the now more generally approved system of making his notes a portion of the text, instead of placing them, as of yore, at the foot of the page. The General Rules of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, with the schedule of forms rendered necessary by the statute of 1854, follow the index, and complete the work.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—New Edition.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE of the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 14s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinal malidis), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1834. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

First-class Investments, comprising Annuities or Rent-charges, granted under the Metropolitan Districts Acts of Parliament, and secured upon the various Police-offices.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions from the Executors of the late George Townley, Esq., of the Albany, to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Thursday next, May 17, at 12, the following very valuable ANNUITIES or RENT-CHARGES, viz.:—Lot 1. A rent or annuity of 315*l.* per annum, clear of all deductions, for 17 years, secured upon the Bow-street Police-court, under the authority of the Receiver-General, acting under the Metropolitan Police Districts Acts of Parliament. Lot 2. A rent or annuity of 123*l.* 18*s.*, clear of all deductions, for 43 years, secured upon the Hunter-street Police-court, Brunswick-square, and premises, under the like authority. Lot 3. An annuity of 266*l.* 2*s.*, clear of all deductions, for 48 years, secured upon the Blackman-street Police-station, Borough, under the like authority. Lots 4 and 5. Improved rents, amounting to 267*l.* per annum, clear of all deductions, for 51 years, secured upon premises in Great Scotland-yard, occupied by the Commissioners of Police, and partly by the Lords of the Admiralty. Lot 6. An annuity of 254*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*, clear of all deductions, for 84 years, secured upon the Westminster Police-station, Vincent-square, under the authority of the Metropolitan Police Districts Acts of Parliament. Lot 7. An annuity of 554*l.* 12*s.* per annum, clear of all deductions, for 30 years, secured upon the Greenwich Police-station, Blackheath-road, under the like authority.

Particulars are preparing, and may shortly be had of James Townley, Esq., solicitor, 1, Moorgate, London-wall; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, 6, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Twickenham Common, within one mile of the Station.—Beautiful Freehold Gothic Villa Residence, Stabling, Pleasure Grounds, and Paddocks, with possession.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, May 30, at 12, a beautiful detached Gothic VILLA RESIDENCE, freehold and small part copyhold, at Twickenham Common, about one mile from the station, and near to the park of Sir William Clay, Bart. The residence is approached from the high road through handsome iron entrance gates, is placed in the centre of the pleasure grounds, ornamented with stately timber, and contains seven bed chambers, two dressing rooms, boudoir, drawing and dining rooms, library, breakfast room, bath room, and servants' offices; detached stabling, dairy, and carriage yard, tastefully disposed pleasure grounds, walled kitchen garden, orchard, and paddocks. The whole about 31 acres. There is plenty of good water, excellent drainage, and gravelly soil. Abutting on the pleasure grounds is a fine sheet of water, which is rented of the Duke of Northumberland.

May be viewed, and particulars had of Messrs. Nelson, solicitors, Essex-street, Strand; of Messrs. Burley and Carlisle, solicitors, New-square, Lincoln's-inn; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Warwick-road West, Paddington.—A capital newly-erected long Leasehold Residence, with possession.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK and LYE will SELL, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, May 30, at 12, by direction of the Executors of Edward Dixon, Esq., the mortgage, a capital newly-erected FAMILY RESIDENCE, 1, Warwick-road West, of handsome elevation, ornamentally stuccoed, and pleasantly situate at the junction of the Warwick-road, Clifton-villas, and Clifton-gardens, and near to the site for the new church, and contains on the upper floor, two bed rooms; on the third floor, two good bed rooms, landing, and water-closet; on the second floor, two spacious bed rooms, dressing or bath room on landing; on the first floor, two elegant and lofty drawing rooms, finished with great taste, with bow front window, fitted with plate-glass; good dining room and library, lobby, water-closet, and school room; entrance and inner halls, with stone staircase, handsome iron balustrades, and the walls papered in imitation of Siennae marble; kitchen, scullery, housekeeper's room, pantry, footman's room, wine cellar, larder, coal vaults, &c. in the area, and side entrance to the road. The principal rooms are of good dimensions and proportions, and finished in a superior style. The estimated annual value being 160*l.* per annum. Is held under a lease for a term of 97½ years from the 25th March, 1853, at a ground rent of 24*l.* per annum.

May be viewed on application, and particulars had at the residence; of Messrs. Lee and Pemberton, solicitors, 44, Lincoln's-inn-fields; at Garraway's; and of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, 6, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Very valuable Freehold Estates, Strand and Temple-bar, producing about 630*l.* per annum, part of the estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to prepare for SALE by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, May 30, at 12, in lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, viz.:—The New Barn public-house and wine-vaults, in St. Clement's churchyard, in the Strand, let on lease, expiring 1859, at 180*l.* per annum, a premium of several thousand pounds having been given for the lease. Nos. 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 15, and 16, Great Shire-lane, and Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Brick-court, on leases and agreements, at rents amounting to 170*l.* per annum. No. 37, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Mr. W. Stevens, as a printing office, at 65*l.* per annum; and 39, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Messrs. Richard Stevens and G. S. Norton, at 65*l.* per annum. The dwelling-house and printing-offices, 38, Bell-yard, and 10, Great Shire-lane, on lease to Messrs. Roworth and Sons, at 171*l.* per annum, and ground in the rear of 41 and 42, Bell-yard. The properties may be viewed by permission of the respective tenants.

Particulars are preparing, and may be had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 9, Chancery-lane; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Hammersmith.—Very valuable Copyhold Estates, producing about 160*l.* per annum, part of the Estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, May 30, at 12, in lots, a very valuable COPYHOLD ESTATE, situate in the High-street, Hammersmith, near the Broadway, comprising three capital Houses and Shops, with large gardens, in the occupations of Mr. Lacey, grocer, and Mr. Barker, upholsterer, at rents amounting to 137*l.* 10*s.* per annum; also a very valuable piece of Copyhold Ground, now used as a market garden, in the rear of the foregoing, and having frontage to, and entrance from, Great Church-lane, adapted for building purposes. The property is copyhold of the Manor of Fulham, subject to a quit-rent of 2*s.* per annum, and the land-tax is redeemed.

May be viewed by permission of the tenants, and particulars had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 9, Chancery-lane; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Chepstow, Monmouthshire.—The distinguished Freehold Domain of Piercefield, capital Mansion, beautifully undulated and finely timbered Park, bounded by the river Wye, to which there is a terrace walk extending about three miles, gardens and pleasure grounds, together with several compact Farms, with all suitable Farming Buildings, and upwards of 3000 acres of productive Land, a portion of which is especially adapted for the erection of villas, several private residences and cottages in the village of St. Arvans, and the Piercefield Inn; also the Stall-house Farm, in the parish of Redwick, about a mile and a half from the Magar Station on the South Wales Railway.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to submit for SALE by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Thursday, May 31, at 12, in one or numerous lots, (unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract), the distinguished DOMAIN of PIERCEFIELD, mansion, park, pleasure grounds, and lands, most beautifully situate on the banks of the Wye, near the town of Chepstow; the domain immediately attached to the mansion, embracing about 700 acres, a considerable portion of which forms the park, inclosed by a wall of nearly two miles in extent, beautifully undulated and clothed with forest, yew, and other trees and brushwood, stretching down to the banks of the Wye, that part which skirts the river being precipitous, and having winding walks of several miles in extent, commencing near Chepstow Castle, and ending at the celebrated Wyndcliffe, at various points commanding the most extensive views of the scenery of the confluence of the Severn and Wye, with the distant views of Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Somersetshire, the Bristol Channel, Monmouthshire, Glamorganshire, &c.: the limits of an advertisement render it impossible to give an adequate description of the scenery of this beautiful locality. The estate commences within one mile of Chepstow, and extends, with little interruption, to Tintern Abbey. The several farms are known as Portcassage, Lancelot, Red House, Penntery, the Gardens, Gaer-hill, Brown's Grounds, Great and Little Pantas, Cae Douta, Panyr Mill, and Lands; numerous private residences and cottages in the village of St. Arvans, the Piercefield Inn, and several plots of accommodation and building land; the whole comprising an area of about 2100 acres, and of the value of nearly 3000*l.* per annum. Also, in the parish of Redwick, about one mile and a half from the Magar Station on the South Wales Railway, between Kingston and Newport, the freehold farm, known as Stall-house Farm, comprising about 45 acres, in the occupation of Mr. Lewis Williams, at the rent of 80*l.* per annum.

Particulars, with plans, may be had at the Beaumont Arms Inn, Chepstow; of Messrs. Evans, solicitors, Chepstow, Monmouthshire; Red Lion, Magar; King's Head, Newport; and in London, of Messrs. Hume and Bird, the solicitors to the vendors, 10, Great James-street, Bedford-row; and of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place.

Wiltshire.—Very valuable Church Preferment, amounting to nearly 1500*l.* per annum; the Incumbent aged 70 years.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, (unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract), the very valuable NEXT PRESENTATION (subject to the life of the incumbent, aged 70 years) to the RECTORY of Pewsey, situate about seven miles from Marlborough, twelve from Devizes, thirty from Bath, and fourteen from the Great Western Station at Hungerford; consisting of an excellent residence, with offices, garden, and 124*a.* 2*a.* 1*p.* of glebe land. Also the commuted Rent-charge in lieu of the great and small tithes of the parish, containing about 4000 acres. The gross annual value is 1464*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*

Descriptive particulars may be had, 21 days previous to the sale, of Messrs. Blake, Tylee, & Tylee, 14, Essex-street, Strand; at the Bear Inn, Devizes; Allesbury Arms, Marlborough; White Hart, Bath; Angel, Oxford; Bull, Cambridge; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Essex.—In the parish of Magdalen Laver, easy distances from Harlow, and the capital Market Towns of Epping, Bishop Stortford, and Ongar, very desirable and compact Freehold Estate, called Spencer's Farm, with upwards of 136 acres of productive Land.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, a very desirable FREEHOLD ESTATE, called Spencer's Farm, land-tax redeemed, partly adjoining the high road from Epping to Harlow, six miles from the former, five from the latter, and six and eight miles respectively from the capital market towns of Ongar and Bishop Stortford; comprising a capital farm-house, garden, warm yards, all suitable and well-arranged agricultural buildings, and 126*a.* 1*a.* 39*p.* of productive arable and pasture land, lying within a ring fence. The lands are in a high state of cultivation, the pastures are bounded by a stream, and lie well for irrigation. There are several ponds on the property, and it has been in the occupation for upwards of twenty years of the late Mr. John Larter, a highly-respectable and intelligent farmer, and now of his executors.

May be viewed, and particulars, with plans, had at the farm; at the George and Green Man Inns, Harlow; Cock, Epping; Crown, Ongar;

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 12, 1855.

On a recent occasion, in the House of Peers, Lord Campbell stated that he found an impression prevailing among the authorities of the different towns on circuit, that the military (including the militia) should be excluded from them during the holding of the assizes; but stated his own opinion to be, that this was not required by law, although it was so during the holding of elections of members to serve in Parliament. The Lord Chancellor concurred in this opinion. The practice in this respect has differed during the last year or two in different places; in some the militia were retained in the town, and formed a considerable portion of the spectators and auditors in court; in others, they were sent away, from a supposition that it was constitutional to do so; in others, they left merely because of the difficulty felt by the inhabitants in billeting them, and at the same time providing for the invasion of counsel, attorneys, and witnesses*. It may be that in former times the ministers of justice were supposed to be overawed by the rude soldiery in their vicinity; or that powerful suitors would have endeavoured to avail themselves of the military power in support of their claims, or of their resistance to the claims of others; the maxim "inter arma leges silent" then had a practical application. The army have often been used as the instrument of despotism; as the law itself, although generally the friend of liberty, has also been perverted to the same end. Between the two, however, there has at times been the most strenuous conflict, and some symptom of it may have been, at all events until recently, perceived in the fact that the soldier was not popular with the lawyer, nor certainly the lawyer with the soldier. At the present day, however, there is happily a combination rather than an antagonism of the forces of the State, all tending to the preservation of internal peace and the enforcement of justice. The objects of civil and military power in this respect should be identical, and there appears no reason whatever for the retreat of our army before the peaceful judge and barrister upon circuit, leaving the "javelin man" as the only representative of physical force.

At elections, generally a time of intense excitement, riot, and battle, when each party tries to enlist on his side all the material guaranties that are available, other considerations present themselves, and it may be as well to deprive them of the formidable strength—ready to hand—of armed and disciplined soldiers.

* A military friend has informed us that the rule in practice in England is to confine the men to the barracks until the judge sends word that he does not think it necessary to do so; but that in Ireland, the judges, not being afraid of soldiers, are often attended by a military guard of honour.

From the first establishment of a standing army, the jealousy of the House of Commons has been directed to prevent any military interference at elections. Thus, (4 Journ. 346, Nov. 17, 1645), the House resolved, "That all elections of any knight, citizen, or Burgess to serve in Parliament be made without interruption or molestation by any commander, governor, officer, or soldier." Again, (24 Journ. 37, Dec. 22, 1741), "That the presence of a regular body of soldiers at an election of members to serve in Parliament is a high infringement of the liberties of the subject, a manifest violation of the freedom of elections, and an open defiance of the laws and constitution of this kingdom."

This resolution was passed in consequence of the proceedings at the Westminster election in 1741. The Westminster justices were ordered into custody, and reprimanded by Speaker Onslow, for unnecessarily calling in the military. The concluding part of his address was as follows:—"What you have done is against one of the most essential parts of the law of this kingdom. Has any real necessity been shewn for it? There might be fears—there might be some danger; but did you try the strength of the law to dispel those fears and remove that danger? Did you make use of those powers the law has invested you with as civil magistrates for the preservation of the public peace? No; you deserted all that, and wantonly, and I hope inadvertently, resorted to that force, the most unnatural of all others, in all respects, to that cause and business you were then attending, and for the freedom of which every Briton ought to be ready to suffer anything." (See Rogers on Elections, 237, note (a)).

Previous to this last resolution, viz. in the year 1736, in consequence of the increase of the standing army about that period, the House of Lords directed the judges to prepare the act of the 8 Geo. 2, c. 30, by which all soldiers quartered in the county, borough, or place where the election was held were to remove, at least one day before the election, to the distance of two miles or more, and not to return until one day after the poll is ended. (8 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 1, 1736). An exception, however, was introduced by sect. 3 in favour of the Guards in the liberty of Westminster, or in Southwark, or other place of royal residence, or in any fort or garrison in respect of such number of soldiers whereof the garrison was composed, or in respect of any soldier or officer entitled to vote at such election. The statute recites—"Whereas by the ancient common law of this land all elections ought to be free; and whereas by an act passed in the third year of King Edward the First, of famous memory, it is commanded, upon great forfeiture, that no man*, by force of arms, nor by malice or menacing, shall disturb any to make free election; . . . and whereas it hath been the usage and practice to cause any regiment, troop, or company, or any number of soldiers which hath been quartered in any city, borough, or place where any election of members to serve in Parliament hath been appointed to be made, to remove and continue out of the same during the time of such election;" and then enacted as above.

This statute, however, was repealed by the 10 Vict.

* This should be, "no great man:" in the original it is "nul haut homme."

c. 21, which, after reciting that in consequence of changes in the law for taking the poll, the inconvenience and expense of removing soldiers was greatly increased, enacts, that on every day fixed for the nomination, election, or taking the poll, no soldier within two miles shall be allowed to go out of barracks, unless to mount or relieve guard, or give his vote at the election, and that, going out for that purpose, he shall return with all convenient speed. Provision is made for notice of all elections to be given by the Clerk of the Crown to the Secretary at War, and by him to the general officer commanding the district; and it is provided that the act is not to extend to any soldiers attending as guards on her Majesty, or employed or stationed in the Bank of England.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WE call attention to an important decision relating to costs under the County Court Act. The plaintiff claimed more than 20*l.*; the defendant paid 8*l.* into court, and the plaintiff took it out in satisfaction. Coleridge, J., in a considered judgment, held that the plaintiff was not deprived of his costs under the County Court Act. (Chambers v. Wiles, Bail Court, May 2).

Where the costs of an appeal were taxed by the clerk of the peace by consent, the Court of Queen's Bench refused to interfere, although they were not taxed until after the court of quarter sessions making the order for them had ceased to exist. (Reg. v. The Hereford and Shrewsbury Railway Company, Queen's Bench, April 21). See also, as to an order for costs at quarter sessions, In re Ely, (Bail Court, May 1).

The Court of Common Pleas has allowed to be placed on the record, to an action of detinue for a lease, two equitable pleas in these terms:—1. That the plaintiff sued the defendants for the detention of the said lease, and recovered judgment in a former action, and issued execution, and took other proceedings to enforce the said judgment; that the sum of 150*l.*, to secure which the said lease was deposited, is still due; and that no tender of that sum has been made since the judgment in the said former action, nor has any demand of the lease been made after the termination of the proceedings in the said former action. 2. That the lease was deposited to secure payment to the defendants of 150*l.* and interest, by way of equitable mortgage, upon the terms of an agreement in writing; the former recovery, and proceedings thereon; that the 150*l.* is still due; that, after the commencement of this action, the defendants tendered and offered to deliver up the lease to the plaintiff upon payment of the said 150*l.*, and the defendants also tendered and offered the plaintiff his costs of this action up to that time; and that such tender and offer were refused.

To an action on a bond the Court of Queen's Bench allowed, as an equitable plea, accord and satisfaction by delivery of another bond for a larger sum. (Lord Petrie v. Stubbs, May 1).

A bond, conditioned that B. should pay to I. such costs as C. should, in due course of law, be liable to pay in case of discontinuance, nonsuit, or verdict against him, and should allow C. to retain and apply any monies of D. towards payment of such costs, has been held not to constitute a debt due from D. as garnishee, to C., within sect. 64 of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854. (Johnson v. Diamond, Exchequer, April 27).

The following gentlemen form the select committee on the Bills of Exchange Bills:—Sir Erskine Perry, the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General (Ireland), the Lord Advocate, Mr. Walpole, Q. C., Mr. Keating, Q. C., Mr. Atherton, Q. C., Mr. Lowe, Mr. Kirk, Mr. Glyn, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Horsfall, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Henley, and Mr. Hankey. The committee have power to call for the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents.

CHANCERY QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—The following arrangement has been made as to the courts in which the Queen's Counsel will practise:—

Master of the Rolls.

R. P. Roupell, Esq.	Roundell Palmer, Esq.
E. J. Lloyd, Esq.	B. S. Follett, Esq.

Vice-Chancellor Kindersley.

C. T. Swanston, Esq.	John Bailly, Esq.
C. P. Cooper, Esq.	W. B. Glasse, Esq.
J. G. Teed, Esq.	James Anderson, Esq.
James Campbell, Esq.

Vice-Chancellor Stuart.

C. Temple, Esq.	R. Malins, Esq.
J. Walker, Esq.	W. Elmaley, Esq.
L. T. Wigram, Esq.	R. D. Craig, Esq.
James Bacon, Esq.

Vice-Chancellor Wood.

John Rolt, Esq.	J. G. Phillimore, Esq.
Thomas Chandless, Esq.	T. E. Headlam, Esq.
John W. Willcock, Esq.	W. M. James, Esq.
W. T. S. Daniel, Esq.

All these gentlemen also attend the Courts of Appeal.
Easter Term, 1855.

At the dinner at the Royal Academy on Saturday last, the President, in proposing the health of Lord Campbell, stated, that from the habit of seeing learned judges on such occasions, he had been involuntarily led to conclude that there was some necessary connexion between the fine arts and law. Indeed, the Chief Baron was the honoured president of the Photographic Society. He remembered, however, that on the occasion of a trial respecting a picture many years since—a picture attributed to some great name, and valued at 1500*l.*—Lord Ellenborough observed to the jury, that in his opinion no picture could be worth 1500*l.*—Lord Campbell, in returning thanks, said he was afraid the lawyers could not be considered as engaged in cultivating a sister art, although they were no doubt a good deal employed in giving colour to that in which they were concerned. But still they did assist the sister art, for Chief Justice Gascoigne had frequently adorned those walls while committing the Prince of Wales to prison.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION*.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN HER HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

YOUR Majesty having been pleased to issue a commission authorising and appointing us to inquire into and report on the state of the courts established under an act passed in the session of Parliament held in the ninth and tenth years of your Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts," and the course of practice therein, and particularly with respect to the fees levied in the said courts, and whether the same can be reduced in amount, or can be levied in a manner less burthensome to the suitors, and whether the costs of proceedings in the said courts can be reduced, and whether any and what alterations and amendments can be made for the better administration of justice in the said courts, and whether any and what business can be usefully and properly transferred to them in addition to that which they now perform, we, your Majesty's commissioners, in the execution of the duties imposed upon us, have proceeded to examine and consider the important subjects on which we are desired to report.

We commenced the discharge of our duties by addressing interrogatories to the judges, officers of the court, and other persons whom we considered to be capable of giving useful information on the matters within the scope of our commission; we also examined witnesses on the same subjects, and from time to time procured returns which we thought likely to assist us in our inquiries.

Before stating our opinions and recommendations concerning the matters referred to us by your Majesty's commission, we propose to commence this our first report by an exposition of the state of the courts as they at present exist, with reference to the following matters:—

First, the establishment of the courts.

Secondly, the jurisdiction.

Thirdly, the judges, officers, and advocates.

Fourthly, the procedure.

Fifthly, the fees.

Sixthly, the costs.

Seventhly, the accounts.

Eighthly, the revenue of the courts.

Ninthly, application of revenue.

I.—ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COURTS.

County Court a Court of Record.—The courts to which our inquiries, in obedience to your Majesty's instructions, have been directed, were established in the year 1847, in pursuance of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts;" and the title by which the court under consideration is generally known is "the county court." It is a court of record, and has a seal with which its process must be stamped.

Supervised by Superior Courts.—The county court, like all inferior jurisdictions, is subject to the supervision of the superior courts by writs of certiorari and prohibition. The granting of the latter is facilitated by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 22, which enables a judge to issue such writs in vacation as well as in term.

Districts formed, and distributed among Circuits.—In pursuance of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the whole of England and Wales, with the exception of the city of London, which is specially excluded from the operation of the act, was in the year 1847, by Order in Council, divided into districts. These varied in extent and population. In determining what parishes and townships should be included in the different districts, the wishes and convenience of the inhabitants were consulted, and from time to time several modifications of the original arrangement have been made by successive Orders in Council. The number of districts originally formed was 491, but, on the petition of certain places, has been increased to 495, which constitute the existing districts. In each of these districts one, and in some cases two, courts have been established, the number of which is now 500. The court is held in that part of the district which, on inquiry, appears most convenient to the majority of the inhabitants. The building in which the court sits has, in some instances, been erected by Government specially for the purpose; sometimes it is a town hall, court house, or other public building belonging to a county, city, borough, or town; sometimes it is a dissenting chapel, a savings bank, a literary institution, or an inn, according to the conveniences for the purpose which the neighbourhood presents. With respect to the public buildings belonging to counties, cities, boroughs, and towns, the free use of them is secured by statute to the court as a matter of right; but in other cases the place of holding the court is either built or hired by the treasurer, with the sanction of Government, and the expenses are paid out of the general fund of the court.

* The commissioners are, the Master of the Rolls, Mr. Justice Erie, Mr. Justice Crompton, Henry Fitzroy, Esq., H. S. Keating, Q. C., J. H. Koe, Q. C., Serjt. Dowling, J. Pitt Taylor, Esq., and Joseph Randolph Mullings, Esq.

These 495 districts are distributed, in numbers varying from one to thirteen, among sixty different divisions or circuits. To each of these divisions or circuits a judge has been appointed.

II.—JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of the county court is both original and auxiliary.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

This jurisdiction is legal and equitable.

LEGAL JURISDICTION.

The legal jurisdiction is of three kinds—exclusive, concurrent, and by consent.

Exclusive Jurisdiction.

The exclusive jurisdiction is conferred by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

Proviso.—By sect. 58 of that act it is provided, “that all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.*, whether on balance of account or otherwise, may be holden in the county court without writ: provided always, that the court shall not have cognisance of any action of ejectment, or in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question, or in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed, or for any malicious prosecution, or for any libel or slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, or breach of promise of marriage.”

Jurisdiction protected and enforced.—The jurisdiction is protected by sect. 90 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, which prevents the removal of any plaint into the superior courts unless the debt or damage claimed shall exceed 5*l.*, and then only by leave of a judge of one of the superior courts, on such terms as he shall think fit. This provision is confirmed by sect. 16 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61.

The jurisdiction in cases not within the above provisions, and not within the exceptions contained in sect. 128, hereafter mentioned, is enforced by sect. 129, which deprives the plaintiff of costs if he obtain a verdict in a superior court for a sum less than 20*l.* in actions founded on contract, or less than 5*l.* if founded on tort; and where the verdict in such cases is for the defendant, he is entitled to his costs, as between attorney and client, unless in either case the judge trying the cause shall certify that the action was fit to be brought in the superior court. By sect. 13 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, these provisions are extended to cases in which the parties have not proceeded to verdict. The provisions as to deprivation of costs are modified by sect. 11 of the same statute, which excludes judgments by default from their operation.

Judge's Decision in such Cases final.—The decision of the judge of the county court, whether assisted by a jury or not, is final in cases within this branch of the jurisdiction.

Protection Cases.—Another branch of exclusive jurisdiction of the court is that which is exercised in protection cases. By sect. 4 of stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, the jurisdiction under the Protection Acts (the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) is transferred to the county court in cases arising more than twenty miles from the General Post-office in London. The decision of the judge in these cases is final.

Nuisances.—Where, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 123, a nuisance has been removed, under certain circumstances, from premises by a person other than the owner or occupier, the former is entitled to sue the latter in the county court for the expenses incurred in so doing. In these cases, although questions of title may and do frequently arise, the decision of the court on the matter is final.

Concurrent Jurisdiction.

*Where Claim does not exceed 20*l.—The jurisdiction given by sect. 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, is by sect. 128 rendered concurrent with that of the superior courts, where the parties reside more than twenty miles from each other, or where the cause of action does not arise wholly or in some material point within the district within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of bringing the action, or where an officer of the court is a party, except in respect of a claim to goods taken in execution by process of the court.

*Where Claim exceeds 20*l.—Appeal.—By the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1, a jurisdiction, where the amount of the claim for debt or damages does not exceed 50*l.*, is conferred on the county court, subject to the exceptions contained in the proviso of sect. 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. This jurisdiction is, however, concurrent with that of the superior courts, and is subject to appeal at the instance of either party who is “dissatisfied with the determination or direction of the court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence.” The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 2, provides that such appeals shall be disposed of as part of the ordinary business of the court to which the appeal is made.

Replevin.—The county court has also concurrent jurisdiction in replevin. By sect. 119 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, all actions of replevin in cases of distress for rent in arrear, or damage feasant, must be brought in the court created by this act, instead of the common-law county court; but either party, on complying with certain conditions, may remove the plaint, if he declares to the court “that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair, or franchise, is in question, or that the rent or damage in respect of which the distress shall have been taken is more than 20*l.*” Unless, therefore, the plaint be removed in conformity with the provisions of that section, the county court has jurisdiction to decide all questions of title, and is not limited to any amount.

Ejectment.—The proviso in sect. 58 is modified in certain cases of ejectment by sect. 122 of the same act, which enables landlords, after the expiration of the tenancy, to recover possession of houses, lands, or other corporeal hereditaments, where the rent or value of the premises does not exceed 50*l.* a year, and no fine has been paid.

Customs.—Jurisdiction in certain matters connected with the administration of the customs law has lately been conferred on the court. By sect. 263 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, (the Customs Act), the Crown may sue in the county court for duties or penalties not exceeding in any case the sum of 100*l.* The decision of the judge is final in such cases. By sect. 318, in case of any alleged illegal seizure of any boat, vessel, or goods by the custom-house officer, an action may be brought against him in the county court where the damages claimed do not exceed the amount to which the jurisdiction of the court is limited; and sect. 319 provides that the case shall not be tried by a jury except by consent of both parties, and that the decision of the judge shall be subject to appeal, in the same manner as is allowed in other actions triable in the court.

Jurisdiction by Consent.

Appeal.]—Under the provisions of sect. 17 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, the parties may by consent confer a jurisdiction on the county court, notwithstanding that the amount of the claim may exceed 50*l.*, and that the action is one “in which the title to land, whether of freehold, copyhold, leasehold, or other tenure, or to any tithe, toll, market, fair, or other franchise, shall be in question.” It will be observed, that the cases in which questions of law may by consent be decided by the county court are not so numerous as those excepted by sect. 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. By the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 16, s. 1, the decision of the judge in such cases is subject to appeal, on the same grounds as in cases where the sum claimed exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*

Arresting Ships.]—By the 527th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, (the Shipping Act), in the event of an injury having been done by one vessel to another in any part of the world, it will, on and after the 1st May, 1855, be competent for the judge of the county court, in certain cases, on the complaint of the injured party, to direct the vessel to be detained until satisfaction is made for the alleged wrong, or security is given to abide the event of a legal proceeding in respect of it.

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

The equitable jurisdiction of the county court is concurrent and by consent, but cannot be treated as exclusive, except in protection and insolvency cases.

This jurisdiction is confirmed by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and several subsequent statutes.

Partnership—Distributive Share—Legacy.

By sect. 65 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the jurisdiction of the court is extended to the recovery of any demand not exceeding the sum of 20*l.*, (now by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, to 50*l.*), “which is the whole or part of the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy, or of any legacy under a will.”

By sect. 17 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, the consent of the parties will give jurisdiction in such cases to any amount.

Friendly Societies.

By the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, s. 22, (the Friendly Societies Act), if a dispute arise between the members and the trustees, treasurer, or other officer or committee, and is of such a kind that for the settlement of it, according to the laws now in force, recourse must be had to a court of equity, it may be referred, at the option of either party, to a judge of a county court.

This act is continued by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 65, s. 4, to the end of the session of 1854, and by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 101, to the 1st October, 1855, and the end of the then next session of Parliament.

Industrial and Provident Societies.

The above provisions applicable to Friendly Societies are extended by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, s. 8, to industrial and provident societies.

Charitable Trusts.

By the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, (the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853), sect. 32, where the gross annual income of any charity does not exceed 30*l.*, and where equitable relief is required, jurisdiction, subject to certain conditions contained in the act, is given to the county court to entertain the application, and to “give such relief, and make such orders and directions in relation to the matter of such application, as now might be made or given by the Court of Chancery, or by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted with the care and commitment of the custody of lunatics, in a suit regularly instituted, or upon petition, as the case may require.” It is provided, however, by sect. 41, “that no county court shall, upon any proceedings under this act, have jurisdiction to try or determine the title at law or in equity to any real or personal property, or any term or interest therein, as between any charity, or the trustee thereof, and any person holding or claiming such real or personal property, term or interest, adversely to such charity, or to try or determine any question as to the existence or extent of any charge or trust.” By sect. 39 of the act, a right of appeal, subject to certain conditions, is given to the party who alleges himself to be aggrieved by or dissatisfied with any order made by any county court. It may be observed, that although the jurisdiction under this act extends only to charities the annual income whereof does not exceed 30*l.*, yet, should the amount with which a defaulting trustee is chargeable exceed the sum of 50*l.*, there is no provision in the statute which excludes the jurisdiction of the county court in such a case.

Succession Duties.

By sect. 50 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, (the Succession Duties Act), any accountable party, dissatisfied with the assessment of the commissioners, may, on complying with the conditions prescribed in the section, if the “sum in dispute in respect of duty on such assessment does not exceed 50*l.*, appeal to the judge of the county court, who will have jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter of the appeal and the costs thereof.” His decision is final. Considering the interests in property which is the subject of the duty, as well as the provisions of the act with respect to its collection, it is evident that difficult questions of equity as well as of law may arise in the determination of the appeal. In consequence of the mode in which sect. 50 is expressed, a far greater sum than 50*l.* may become the subject of inquiry in the county court.

Insolvency and Protection.

Both in protection and insolvency cases various questions of an equitable description do of necessity frequently arise.

Literary Institutions.

By the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, in case of any institution contemplated by the act being desirous of dissolving itself, and any dispute arising among the governing body or the members of the institution, the adjustment of its affairs shall be referred to the judge of the county court of the district in which the principal building of the institution shall be situate, who may make such order as he may deem requisite; or, if he find it necessary, he may direct that proceedings shall be taken in the Court of Chancery. The judge is also to determine, in the event of disagreement, to what institution any surplus funds should be given.

AUXILIARY JURISDICTION.

The auxiliary jurisdiction of the Court is both legal and equitable.

LEGAL JURISDICTION.

Absconding Debtors.

By the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 52, power is given to the judge of the county court to issue his warrant for the apprehension of persons sworn to be indebted to the amount of 20*l.* or upwards, and who are about to quit England. This power is subsidiary to actions in the superior courts.

Common-law Procedure Act.

By the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, it is provided, that where, at any time after the issuing of the writ in any superior court of common law, it appears to the satisfaction of the court or a judge, upon the application of either party, that the matter in dispute consists wholly or in part of matter of mere account, which cannot conveniently be tried in the ordinary way, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order that such matter, either wholly or in part, in country causes, shall be referred to the judge of any county court.

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

Chancery.

By sect. 22 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the judge may be required to perform all such duties relating to causes or matters depending in Chancery, or any judge thereof, or before the Chancellor in the exercise of any authority belonging to him, necessary or proper to be done in the respective districts, as the Chancellor shall from time to time by any general order direct.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act.

By sect. 20 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, (an act amending the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45), judges of county courts sitting at places more than twenty miles from the General Post-office are appointed commissioners to act under the powers of that and the previous statute, and the Master may, by any order under his hand, refer the whole or any part of the examination of any witnesses to any such judge.

Insolvency.

The jurisdiction of insolvency under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is by the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, s. 10, vested in the county court, where the insolvent is in custody in any gaol more than twenty miles from the General Post-office. The Insolvent Court in London, to which the petition of the insolvent must in the first instance be presented, is required in such cases to refer the hearing to the county court.

In this branch of the jurisdiction questions of law also arise.

Common-law County Court.

Except as to matters brought by statute within the jurisdiction of the newly-established court, the county court at common law retains its powers and jurisdiction, and may be held simultaneously with the modern county court.

It is proper to observe, that no privilege is allowed to exempt any person from the jurisdiction of the modern county court.

III.—JUDGES, OFFICERS, AND ADVOCATES.

We will now proceed to the next head, which concerns the judges, officers, and advocates of the court.

Judge.

Qualification—Qualification of Successor—How appointed—How removeable—Disqualification.—In order to become the judge of a county court, the necessary qualification was, at the original establishment of the courts, that he should be a barrister-at-law of at least seven years' standing, or that he should have practised as a barrister and special pleader for at least seven years, or have acted in the capacity of judge in some one of certain local courts mentioned in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. In the event of any of the judges dying, resigning, or being removed, the qualification of his successor must be, that he is a barrister of at least seven years' standing, or that he has practised as a barrister and special pleader for at least seven years, or that he has been the county clerk of the same county at the time of passing the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. The judge is appointed by the Lord Chancellor in districts without the limits of the Duchy of Lancaster, and by the Chancellor of the duchy within the limits of the duchy. It is competent for the Lord Chancellor or the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, within their respective jurisdictions, to remove any judge from any district for the purpose of appointing him to any other district, in which the salary of the judge shall not be less than in the district from which he shall be so removed. He is removeable, at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor or Chancellor of the Duchy respectively, for inability or misbehaviour. When appointed he cannot sit as a member of Parliament, nor can he practise at the bar, or as a special pleader, or equity draftsman, or be directly or indirectly concerned as a conveyancer, notary public, solicitor, attorney, or proctor, and if an attorney, he cannot hold certain offices, which, having regard to the present qualification of a judge, it is not necessary to enumerate.

Appointment of Deputy.—In case of illness or unavoidable absence, the cause of which absence must be entered on the minutes of the court, the judge may appoint a deputy to perform the duties of his office. The remuneration of the deputy, however, is by the judge himself. As no cessation of holding his courts is permitted, he may, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, appoint a deputy to act for him during any time or times not exceeding in the whole two calendar months in any consecutive period of twelve calendar months. In that case also he must remunerate the deputy out of his own resources.

Qualification of Deputy.—The qualification of the person to be appointed deputy is, in the former class of the cases above mentioned, that of being the judge of another county court, or a person who has practised as a barrister for at least three years, or as an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law for ten years, but not then residing or practising as an attorney in the district for which the court is holden: in the latter, the qualification is that of being a judge of another county court, or a person who has practised as a barrister-at-law for at least three years. If the deputy be a barrister, he cannot, during the time he acts or shall be entitled to act as such deputy, practise, except in the district of the Westminster County Court, as a barrister in any court within the district for which he acts or shall be entitled to act as such deputy.

Judge may act in the Commission of the Peace.—If the name of any judge of a county court be inserted in any commission of the peace for any county, riding, or division of a county in which he is appointed judge, he is competent to act in the execution of the office of justice of the peace, although not qualified by estate as required by law in the case of other justices of the peace.

Kent.—Very valuable Freehold Estates, in the parishes of Horton Kirby, Farningham, Fawkham, Kemsing, and Seal, comprising nearly 1300 acres, late the property of James Russell, Esq., deceased.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed by the Executors to SELL BY AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Thursday, June 28, at 12, the following valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, in a most beautiful part of the county of Kent, the greater part with possession, about twenty miles from London, five from Dartford, and three from Farningham, in the parishes of Horton Kirby, Fawkham, Farningham, and Kemsing, divided into the following lots, viz.:—Lot 1. A very compact Farm, known as Canada, with two cottages and farm buildings. The Well Field and Beeches Wood, containing together about 106 acres. Lot 2. Church Down Wood, containing 19 acres, situate near Fawkham Church. Lot 3. A valuable Farm, known as Dean Bottom, with homestead and cottages thereon, and about 40 acres of very productive arable land. Lot 4. The Speedgate and Lower Fawkham Farms, including Farningham Fields, with capital slated residence, good garden and offices, lodge, newly-erected cottages for labourers, and most extensive farm buildings, in the best possible state of repair, and erected on various parts of the farm to suit the convenience of occupation; and about 350 acres of arable, hop, pasture, and wood land. Lot 5. The Brandshatch Estate, comprising a good sporting residence, with drawing and dining rooms, five bed rooms, and excellent offices, pleasure grounds, kitchen gardens, &c., very spacious farm buildings, and sundry cottages for labourers, and 615 acres of arable, hop, and wood land, the whole within a ring fence. Lot 6. The Little Brandshatch Estate, situate on Fawkham-green, abutting on the road to Ash, with three cottages, gardens, and stable, &c., and about 4 acres of meadow land, valuable for building purposes, let to Mr. Webster at 35*l.* per annum. Lot 7. The Knockmill Woods, situate close to the Portobello Arms, on the road from Farningham to Wrotham and Sevenoaks, containing about 65 acres. Lot 8. A desirable Inclosure of Meadow Land, situate near to the village of Evesham, in the parishes of Kemsing and Seal, containing about 9 acres, let to Mr. Bennett at 16*l.* per annum. Lot 9. A Cottage and large Garden, situate in the village of Horton Kirby, with valuable frontages to the high road for building purposes, let to Mr. Plumb. Lot 10. Five brick-built Cottages, near the good road, and abutting on the Fighting Cocks, let to various tenants. Lots 11 to 15 inclusive consist of Rent-charges, amounting together to above 200*l.* per annum, and issuing out of sundry farms and fields, &c., in the parish of Horton Kirby. The greater portion of the estates has been for many years in the hands of the late owner and his family, and is in the highest state of cultivation, large sums having been constantly expended in improvements; possession, if desired by a purchaser, may be had on the 11th October next.

May be viewed, and, on application at Brandshatch, Thomas King will shew the estate. Particulars, with plans, had at the Bull Inn, Dartford; Lion, Farningham; Jolly Millers, and Fighting Cocks, Horton Kirby; Bell Inn, Bromley; the Portobello Arms, close to the estates; New Inn, Gravesend; Bull, Rochester; Sun, Chatham; of Benjamin Bodmin, Esq., solicitor, 18, Cannon-street East; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, 6, Lancaster-place, Strand.

In Chancery.—"Spickernell v. Hotham and others."—Oxfordshire, within five miles of the city of Oxford.—The Shotover Estate, comprising a capital Mansion, with beautiful park and pleasure grounds, Five compact Farms, sundry Cottages, and Parcels of Accommodation and Allotment Land, the whole containing about 900 acres.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, the 4th day of July, at 12 o'clock, under an Order of the High Court of Chancery, and with the approbation of Vice-Chancellor Sir William Page Wood, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, title free and land-tax redeemed, situate in the parishes of Shotover and Wheatley, within five miles of the city of Oxford, and eight from Thame, on the London high road, comprising the distinguished mansion known as Shotover House, built by Sir Timothy Tyrrell, Bart., in the reign of James I., celebrated as the place selected by Queen Elizabeth to meet the authorities of Oxford on her visit to that city. The mansion, which is stone, built in the Grecian style of architecture, is approached from the road by a carriage drive through the park, ornamented with a beautiful avenue of trees, and contains a grand entrance hall, a magnificent suite of rooms, comprising saloon, drawing-room, and state bed-room, a noble dining-room and arcade opening to the grounds, numerous principal and secondary bed-chambers and dressing-rooms, and well-arranged domestic offices; with good stabling, loose boxes, coach-houses, &c., lawn studded with stately chestnut and oak of large growth, and other trees, pleasure grounds tastefully disposed in terrace and other walks, lakes of water and fishponds, Gothic temple, pleasure and summer houses, obelisk, &c., kitchen gardens, vinery, and orchard; for many years the residence of George Vandeput Drury, Esq. Also the following compact Farms, principally let on leases to highly respectable tenants, viz. West-hill, Home-hill House, Lodge, and Thornhill Farms; and in the village of Littleworth a Farm-house, and about 25 acres of meadow and arable land, let to Mr. John Ring, at 43*l.* per annum; sundry Cottages, with gardens, several parcels of accommodation and allotment land, with woodland and coppices (in hand), forming an excellent preserve for game. The whole estate contains about 900 acres, and produces a present yearly rental of about 1300*l.* per annum. The estate abounds with valuable clays, particularly ochre, which is considered the finest in England. A considerable income may be realised, in addition to the above rental, from this source.

The estate may be viewed, (the mansion by cards only), and particulars, with plans, had of the balliff, who will shew the estate; at the Star Hotel, Oxford; Spread Eagle, Thame; Crown, Wheatley; and of the following solicitors:—Messrs. H. and E. Willoughby, 4, Lancaster-place, Strand; Messrs. Brace and Colt, 24, Surrey-street, Strand; Messrs. J. Gregory and Sons, 12, Clement's-inn; Messrs. Plucknett and Adams, 17, Lincoln's-inn-fields; Messrs. Hopwood and Son, 47, Chancery-lane; Messrs. Bell, Brodrick, and Bell, Bow-churchyard; Messrs. Walsh, Oxford; William Gray, Esq., York; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place.

In Chancery.—"Branding v. Plummer."—Peremptory Sale.—The important Collieries of Gosforth and Coxlodge, near to Newcastle-on-Tyne, Northumberland.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, July 4, at 12, in lots, pursuant to a Decree of the High Court of Chancery made in the above cause, and with the approbation of the Hon. Sir George Rose, one of the Masters of the said Court, the extensive and well-known COLLIERY called Gosforth Colliery, for a term of thirty-one years from 1852, producing about 25,000 chaldrons of round coal annually, with all the stock used to work the said colliery, and estimated in July, 1853, to be of the value of 18,000*l.* Also the Gosforth Royalty in fee, producing by the before-described lease upwards of 3000*l.* per annum; and five ninth parts of a Leasehold Property, called Coxlodge or Riddell's Wall's-end Colliery, with engines, machinery, and stock thereunto belonging. The collieries are most advantageously situate at an easy distance from a convenient and deep water place of shipment on the river Tyne, and are the only collieries on that river in which any considerable portion of the Wall's-end seams remain unwrought.

Particulars and conditions may be had in London, at the Master's Chambers, Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, (on personal application only); of Messrs. Baker and Co., solicitors, 52, Lincoln's-inn-fields; Messrs. Fringle, Shum, Wilson, and Crossman, solicitors, 3, King's-road, Bedford-row; of Messrs. Blake, Tylee, and Co., solicitors, 14, Essex-street, Strand; of Mr. Philipson and of Mr. Anderson, solicitors, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Mr. Liddell, Benton Grange, near Newcastle-on-Tyne; at the place of sale; at the Inns of the principal towns throughout Northumberland; and of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

North Riding of Yorkshire.—The Egton important and highly-valuable Freehold Estate, intersected by the river Eike, and bounded in part by the Whitby and Pickering Railway, the villages of Egton and Egton-bridge, Water Corn-mill, Quarries, valuable Rights of Fishing for twenty miles, and Shooting, extending over (in addition to cultivated land) 6000 acres of moor; the entire Estate embracing an area of nearly 13,000 acres.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARKE, and LYE respectfully inform the Public that the above highly valuable and important FREEHOLD ESTATE will be offered for SALE by AUCTION in the Spring, unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract.

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK; this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorise any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. R. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

* * To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, (literal and entire), from the Short-hand Writer's Notes, upon the APPLICATION of Mr. W. H. BARBER for his CERTIFICATE. With new Evidence and Remarks.

"It is impossible to deny that Mr. Barber has made out a case for a rehearing on the question of his certificate."—Law Magazine.

"A mass of new and curious evidence, proving the extraordinary skill with which Fletcher executed his fraud, and how completely he had imposed upon Mr. Barber, as well as upon other persons who had better opportunities even than himself for detecting imposition. Not one man in a thousand would have suspected a fraud under such accumulated proofs of apparent genuineness. Mr. Barber has now made his vindication complete."—Law Times.

"This is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable cases in professional history. The explanations and evidence now presented can scarcely fail to satisfy impartial minds. The particulars of the concoction by Fletcher and his confederates of the fraud, as well those introduced to Messrs. Barber & Bircham's office as those previously effected through the instrumentality of other solicitors, have been traced, and it is now shown that in numerous instances Fletcher had succeeded in imposing not only upon his own professional instruments, but also upon those retained by the Government. The statements are fortified by clear evidence, and we cannot but concur in the hope expressed—we believe, unanimously—by our contemporaries, that Mr. Barber may be speedily restored to those professional rights from the enjoyment of which his singular misfortunes have so long debarred him."—The Jurist.

SMITH'S ACTION AT LAW.

In 12mo., price 9s. boards,

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW OF THE PROCEEDINGS of an ACTION AT LAW. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., late of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "Leading Cases," "A Compendium of Mercantile Law," &c. Fifth Edition, adapted to the Practice under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852 and 1854. By EDWARD WISE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"To the lawyer this book will be a useful remembrancer; to the law student it is a necessity. Whatever Mr. Wise has contributed, and necessarily it is a considerable portion of the whole volume, he has done so well that it is scarcely to be distinguished from the original. He has caught the spirit of his master, and carried out his design very much as Smith, had he been living, would have desired."—Law Times, Nov. 18, 1854.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 19, 1855.

No class of provisions in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, have been found more useful in practice, or have been more frequently resorted to, than those which enable parties to a cause to deliver interrogatories, one to the other. (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 51—57). By thus obtaining information as to the real facts of the case, surprise at the trial is in a great measure avoided; the litigants may prepare with greater safety for the actual conflict; or one of them, perceiving, at a comparatively early stage, the hopelessness of success, may retire from the further maintenance of his case. We can, therefore, well understand how it is that in so many actions this important privilege is exercised with considerable effect. The applications relating to this subject are generally made at chambers, and as yet but few questions have been mooted upon it in court. Though few, however, they are important, and we propose to examine them in their order*.

The first is Martin v. Hemming, (10 Exch. 478), decided in Michaelmas Term, 1854. That was an action on a bill of exchange by indorsee against acceptor. After declaration, but before plea, the defendant applied (under sect. 51) for leave to deliver certain interrogatories†. The Court refused the application,

* See 18 Jur., part 2, p. 397, for an article upon this subject, in which forms of affidavits and interrogatories were submitted for use before experience had been had of the working of the statute.

† We subjoin these interrogatories as being useful in practice. In order to understand several of them, it should be stated that Peter Martin was the drawer of the bill:—

"1. When was the bill in the declaration in this cause mentioned first indorsed to you?

upon the ground, that although they had the power to allow the delivery before plea, they would not exercise it, except under special circumstances, as, for instance, where the defendant makes out a case of urgent necessity, which he did not in the case then before the Court*. Considerable discussion took place regarding the effect of the new powers conferred upon the com-

"2. Was it at the same or any other time actually delivered to you; and if the latter, when was it so delivered?

"3. Was there any consideration for such indorsement to you; if so, state what the consideration was, and when it passed; and if there was a money consideration, how and when it was paid, and whether in gold, notes, or by cheque; and if by cheque, on what bank and of what date?

"4. Did you at any time indorse away the bill to any other person or persons; and if so, to whom, and when, and for what, if any, consideration?

"5. Who was the holder of the bill when it became due?

"6. Did you receive any notice of dishonour of the bill; and if so, from whom, and when?

"7. If you were not the holder of the bill when it became due, did you take it up; and if so, when, or who took it up?

"8. Was it taken up by Peter Martin; and if so, when? And did he deliver it to you after he had so taken it up; and if so, when, and for what purpose?

"9. Did you know that the defendant and his creditors had entered into a deed of arrangement for winding up his affairs, according to the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849; if so, when did you first become acquainted with the fact that he had entered into such deed of arrangement, and how and from whom did you learn such fact?

"10. Did you know that the said deed was signed by Peter Martin and by the Borough Bank of Liverpool; and if so, when did you first become acquainted with that fact, and by whom or in what way were you informed of it?

"11. What is your calling and business, and where do you reside and carry on such business? What relation, if any, are you to Peter Martin? Are you in partnership with him, or do you carry on business in the same house or office as Peter Martin?"

mon-law Courts. In the course of the argument it was contended by the defendant's counsel, that the rules by which the system of discovery in equity was governed did not strictly apply to the new system; that such rules were applicable to a state of things when the parties to a suit were not examinable at law; that as they could now be examined in the witness-box, there was no reason why equitable rules should be applied to their written examination. The general language of the section was referred to—"any matter upon which discovery may be sought"—and it was contrasted with sect. 6 of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, relating to the inspection of documents, which allowed such inspection in all cases in which "a discovery might have been obtained by filing a bill, or any other proceeding, in a court of equity." The term "discovery," it was argued, was not to be taken in a technical sense, nor to be construed with reference to its meaning in equity, but that it meant "information." A larger power was given than had hitherto existed, but the leave of the Court was required as a check against the abuse of it. It was therefore urged, that although in equity the right of a party to discovery was limited to the evidence necessary to sustain his own case, to the exclusion of that by which the case of his opponent exclusively might be sustained, (Wig. Disc. 4, 265, 2nd ed.; Story's Eq. Jur., ss. 14, 97), yet under the new practice each of the contending parties should be allowed to learn, before trial, in what manner and by what evidence his adversary proposed to establish his own case. The Court, however, gave no opinion upon these points.

Next came Osborn v. The London Dock Company, (10 Exch. 698), decided in last Hilary Term, in which a very important question was raised, namely, whether a witness, objecting to a question upon the ground of its tendency to criminate him, is bound to satisfy the Court that such will be its effect, or whether he is himself the sole judge of its effect*. Mr. Baron Parke said that the weight of the authorities seemed to be in favour of the rule which requires the witness to satisfy the Court that such will be the effect of the question; but without determining this point, the learned judges decided that at all events the objection must come from the witness himself, and not from his attorney†. The action was to recover certain pipes of wine; the defendants by their pleas denied that they were the property of the plaintiff, and sought by their interrogatories (150 in number) to shew that fraudulent practices had been resorted to, whereby other wines belonging to third parties had been substituted for those which had been deposited with the defendants by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff himself was a party to the fraud. An affidavit by the plaintiff's attorney, that the question tended to criminate his client, was held to furnish no answer to the application. In the course of the argument it was contended that the right to deliver interrogatories was confined to cases where a discovery might have been obtained in a court of equity; but Mr. Baron Parke said, "The language of the 51st section" (which is the one in question) "is much more extensive in its signification, and has no such limitation as that contended for." The 50th section, which empowers the Court to order the production of documents, says that it shall be done upon the affidavit of the party applying for the document, 'to the production of which he is entitled for the purpose of discovery, or otherwise.' And the 51st section says that the party may be interrogated 'upon any matter as to which discovery may be sought.' It does not say that the power is limited to cases in which a bill of discovery will lie." Mr. Baron Alderson added—"The proceeding is analogous to that of the examination of a witness at the trial. It seems to me that the same rules should be followed. . . . The system introduced by this statute is an improvement upon the method of proceeding by bill of discovery." It will be observed with satisfaction, that if the Court of Exchequer has put a somewhat narrow construction upon the statute, so far as it relates to equitable defences, (The Mines Royal Society v. Magnay, 10 Exch. 489), they have sought to give a liberal interpretation to the "discovery" clauses, and rather to mould and adapt them to the common-law system of examination of witnesses, than to incumber them with the rules and doctrines incident to the bill of discovery in Chancery.

We shall conclude our observations by briefly calling attention to the last case upon the subject, (Thol v. Leask, 10 Exch. 704), in which the Court (H. T., 1855) decided, first, that the rule for the delivery of the interrogatories is a rule nisi merely in the first instance; and, secondly, allowed the plaintiff to interrogate the defendant, who had bought goods for him (according to the bought note) "as from a principal," whether he acted in the transaction as principal or agent; and if as agent, to name the principal*.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—May 15.

STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

Mr. L. King asked whether it was intended to ask for a vote of supply this year for the Statute-law Commission; and if so, when the estimate would be laid upon the table; or whether it was intended to issue money for the purposes of the commission without the previous sanction of Parliament?

* The interrogatories were the following:—

"1. Whether the defendant entered into the contract in the declaration as principal or agent?

"2. If as agent, for whom, and by what authority?

"3. If there are any entries in the defendant's books shewing who was the principal in that transaction, and if he has any entry in his contract-book to that effect?

"4. If any money paid to him in respect of the contract in the declaration has been paid over to such principal, and when, and how?

"5. If he has any entry in his pass-book, or other book or books, shewing such payment?"

* See upon this point Best Ev. 162, 2nd ed.; Ph. Ev. 488, 10th ed.; Tayl. Ev., s. 1071; Fisher v. Ronalds, (12 C. B. 762); Short v. Mercier, (3 Mac. & G. 205); and Garbett's case, (1 Den. C. C. 236).

† The objection also, it seems, should be raised by the affidavit in answer to the interrogatories, as a "just cause" for not answering such as tend to criminate, and is not a ground for disallowing the interrogatories in the first instance. See Forsdew v. Lewis, (10 Exch. 712), where it was held to be no answer to an application, under sect. 50, for the discovery of documents, that they were such as the party was privileged from producing; but it was said, that if that were so, the fact may be shewn in the affidavit to be made in obedience to the rule.

Mr. Wilson said there would be a vote proposed for this year, which would be found in class 7. No money would be issued in the meantime, except on the vote of last year, or for expenses already incurred.

LAW OF MORTMAIN.

Mr. Atherton moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to mortmain. He did not propose to interfere with that chief principle of mortmain which referred to the vesting of lands in corporate bodies. His bill was mainly intended to amend the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, relative to the appropriation of land to charitable purposes. With regard to those conveyances of land that were upon full valuable consideration, he proposed to do away with all the restrictions that now existed, with the exception of that which required enrolment in Chancery within six months. The other class of conveyances for charitable purposes were those in which the donor made a voluntary disposal of property without any valuable consideration. In conveyances of this description, he proposed to retain certain restrictions, including enrolment in Chancery; and he also proposed a clause, the object of which was to extend the provisions of what was known by the name of Peto's Act. The honourable and learned member then moved for leave to bring in a bill.

After a few words from Mr. Malins in favour of the motion, leave was given to bring in the bill.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE QUALIFICATIONS.

Mr. Coburn moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to the qualification of justices of the peace. At present no gentleman could qualify unless he was possessed of real property of the value of 100*l.* a year. The alteration which he proposed was, that persons who were possessed of personal property to the extent of 300*l.* a year should likewise be qualified to act as justices of the peace.—Leave given.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Judge—(Continued).

Holding Courts.—The judge is required to hold a court in each district at least once in every month, or at such other interval as one of the Secretaries of State shall order. Of the monthly court he must give at least three months' notice; but he may hold additional courts without such notice. He is not permitted to hold more than one court in any one day. No vacation is allowed to the judge except the time elapsing between the monthly holding of the courts. Where a judge has twelve or thirteen courts on his circuit, this period is necessarily short.

Number of Judges.—The number of existing judges is sixty.

Clerk.

To each court at least one clerk is appointed, but in many cases one person has been appointed clerk to several courts. For the future, however, no clerk can be appointed to more than one court, unless no local attorney will accept the office, or the Chancellor shall otherwise direct. Each clerk hereafter to be appointed must be resident in the district for which he is appointed.

Qualification.—The qualification of a person proposed to be clerk is, that he shall be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law.

Appointment—How removeable—Security.—He is appointed by the judge of the court, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor or the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster respectively. No particular form of appointment is necessary. He is removeable at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor or Chancellor of the Duchy respectively. On his appointment he is bound to give security for such sum and in such manner as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall order, for the due performance of his office, and for the due accounting for and payment of all monies received by him by virtue of his office, or which he may become liable to pay for any misbehaviour in his office.

Disqualification.—When appointed, the clerk is not permitted to be directly or indirectly concerned as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the court.

Appointment of Deputy.—Where the clerk, by illness or unavoidable absence, is prevented from acting in his office, he may, with the approval of the judge, or in case of inability of the clerk, the judge may appoint a person qualified to be appointed clerk of the court to act as deputy, but he is liable to be removed at the clerk's pleasure. When the clerk appoints a deputy, the reason of such appointment must be entered on the minutes of the court in which he acts.

Duties.—The clerk, besides attending the sitting of each court, is bound to issue all summonses, warrants, precepts, and writs of execution, and register all orders and judgments of the court; to take charge of and keep an account of all court fees and fines payable or paid into court, and of all monies paid into and out of court; and to enter an account of all such fees, fines, and monies in a book belonging to the court, to be kept by him for that purpose, and to submit his accounts to be audited and settled by the treasurer. In protection cases he is the official assignee of the insolvent estate. A variety of other duties in matters of detail, necessary to the convenient conduct of the court and the clerk's office, are required by the Rules of Practice to be performed by him.

Remuneration.—His remuneration on the first establishment of the courts was, and still generally is, by certain fees appointed to be taken upon the proceedings in court. A power was, however, reserved to the Government to pay the clerk by an annual salary, not exceeding 700*l.* Out of the fees which the clerks are authorised to take they are bound to pay their assistant clerks. The above power of the Government has been exercised in fifteen districts, where the clerk had only been appointed to one court, and the annual salary appointed to each is 800*l.*, with one exception, where the salary is 500*l.* The salaries of the necessary assistant clerks are also paid by the Government in those cases. Where one clerk has been appointed to several courts, and in some instances the number of them is twelve, he usually makes an arrangement with some local attorney in each district to act as assistant clerk of the court attached to it; a share of the fees is generally the remuneration of the latter, the amount being matter of agreement between the principal and assistant clerk. In some thinly-populated districts the share of the fees which the assistant clerk receives does not exceed 10*l.* per annum.

Distinction between Deputy and Assistant Clerks.—It may be convenient here to point out the distinction between a deputy clerk and assistant clerk. A deputy clerk must have the same qualification (that of being an attorney of a superior court) as a principal clerk; he can only be appointed in certain emergencies, and with the sanction of the judge. An assistant clerk need not be so qualified, (though he generally is), and he may be appointed without the sanction of the judge. The former, by virtue of his appointment, can act in court, and perform all the duties of the principal clerk; the latter cannot act in court, and can only perform such duties as the principal clerk prescribes.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—New Edition.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 17. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinā malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 26, 1855.

THE opinions of the majority of the judges, and the judgment of the House of Lords, in Emmens v. Elderton, (4 H. L. C. 624), confirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Elderton v. Emmens, (6 C. B. 160), notwithstanding the cases of Aspdin v. Austin (5 Q. B. 671) and Dunn v. Sayles, (Id. 685), may be considered as having finally settled, that an agreement between A. and B., that A. will serve B. for a term, and in consideration thereof B. will pay a salary for such service, will, in the absence of any stipulation clearly indicating a contrary intention, raise an implied contract on the part of B. that he will allow A. to continue in the service until the end of the term, in order that the stipulated reward may be earned, and not a mere agreement to pay the salary at the end of the term. B. is not bound to find actual work or employment for A., but he is bound to allow the relation of master and servant, or employer and employed, to continue during the term, subject, of course, to his right to dismiss A. for misconduct. And the distinction between an agreement to employ or to engage the services of a person in the sense before mentioned, for a given term, and then to pay for such services at the end of the term, and an agreement simply to pay a given sum for services at the end of a certain term, is most important in its consequences. In the former case the person employed has an immediate remedy, the moment he is dismissed without lawful cause, for a breach of the contract to employ, and will recover compensation in damages for such breach, which may be less than the stipulated wages payable at the end of the term, if it happens that he has the opportunity of employing his time beneficially in another way, and the employer is not then bound to pay the whole sum agreed upon. But if the agreement be that the person employed is to be paid a certain sum for his services at a certain time, provided he serves or is ready to serve, there being no contract to employ during the term, he can only maintain an action, after that time has arrived, for non-payment, and then is entitled to recover the full amount, though his loss may be much less. And convenience is decidedly in favour of construing such agreements to be contracts to employ, as well as for the payment of wages. The question in the construction of these, as in all other contracts, is, what was the intention of the contracting parties; but the decision in Emmens v. Elderton shews that the strong leaning of the judges is, on grounds of policy and convenience, to hold all contracts for service on the one part, and for the payment of wages on the other, for a specified time, to be contracts on the part of the employer to maintain the relation of employer and employed during the term, (though he is not bound to supply work), and not merely to pay the wages, unless there be some stipulation in the contract, or circumstance connected therewith, clearly and distinctly shewing a contrary intention on the part of the contracting parties. Elderton v. Emmens was an action by an attorney against a company on an agreement between them, which, stripped of the difficulties which arose from the form of the pleadings, was, in substance, "that from a certain day the plaintiff, as attorney of the company, should receive a salary of 100*l.* a year in lieu of rendering an annual bill for general business transacted by him for the company, and should, for such salary, advise and act for the company on all occasions and in all matters connected with the company, (the prosecuting &c. of suits, and some other matters, for which he was to be paid the regular charges, excepted); and that, in consideration that the plaintiff would advise and act for the company in the manner and on the terms aforesaid, the company promised to pay him the salary of 100*l.* a year;" and the plaintiff alleged, as a breach of this agreement, that before the expiration of one year the company wrongfully dismissed him from their employment, and refused to employ him as such attorney of the company, and to pay him the said salary. The Court of Exchequer Chamber, and afterwards the House of Lords, held, that the "refusal to employ," as here alleged, in the breach, must be taken to mean, not a refusal to find actual work for the plaintiff, but, after verdict at least, in the sense which would support the declaration, viz. a refusal to allow the plaintiff to continue in their service as their attorney—a refusal to continue the relation of employer and employed; and that the agreement shewed a contract by the company, not merely to pay the plaintiff his salary at the end of the year, but to continue him in their service as their attorney for one year at least, though they were not bound to find work for him; and that therefore he was entitled to sue the company immediately on his dismissal for the damages he thereby sustained, and was not bound to wait until the end of the year, and then sue for his year's salary;—and the majority of the judges commented strongly on the great inconvenience that would arise from a contrary construction of the contract; for if the only remedy was by action for the salary, the party employed could enter into no inconsistent employment, but must remain idle during the term; for if he acted otherwise he could recover nothing, because he would not have continued ready to serve until the salary became due. Indeed, it is still an open question whether a person who has engaged to serve for a certain time at certain wages, and who is wrongfully turned away by his master before that time has expired, is at liberty to elect to treat the dismissal as no dismissal at all, and to demand at the expiration of the term for which he was hired the whole of his stipulated wages, on the ground that his readiness to serve is equivalent in law to actual service. Mr. Smith, in his notes to Cutter v. Powell, (2 Smith's L. C. 19, 20), states the result of the authorities to be, that a clerk, agent, or servant has his election of three remedies:—First, he may bring a special action for his master's breach of contract in dismissing him, and this remedy he may pursue immediately. (Pagani v. Gandolphi, 2 Car. & P. 370). Secondly, he may treat the contract as rescinded, and may immediately sue on a quantum meruit for the work actually performed; (Planché v. Colburn, 8 Bing. 14); but in that case, as he sues on an implied contract arising out of actual services, he can only recover for the time he has actually served. (And see Fewings v. Tisdal, 1 Exch. 295; 11 Jur. 977, accordante). Thirdly, he may wait until the termination of the period for which he was hired, and may then, perhaps, sue for his whole wages in indebitatus assumpsit, relying on the doctrine of constructive service. (Gandell v. Pontigny, 4 Camp. 375; Collins v. Price, 5 Bing. 132; vide tamen the observations of the judges in Smith v. Hayward, 7 Ad. & El. 544). As observed by Crompton, J., (4 H. L. C. 646), "It is clear, since the case of Fewings v. Tisdal, that this last remedy cannot be maintained in the shape of indebitatus assumpsit, for the simple reason that the allegation of the defendant being indebted for work done is untrue. But the question is still left undecided, how far a special action of debt, averring a contract to pay, a continuing readiness to serve, and a dismissal from service on the part of the master, might not be maintained." And in p. 644 the learned judge, commenting on the inconveniences of allowing such an action, says, "It would be much to be lamented if a servant or agent who was dismissed should be able to say, 'I could easily get another situation as good, or better, but I will not do so, and instead of claiming the real damage I have sustained by the inconvenience and temporary loss of situation, I will bring an action for every instalment of salary till the contemplated period has elapsed.'" And Parke, B., in the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, (6 C. B. 187), said, "If it be held that such a contract as this is for service and pay respectively, and that although the employer has determined the relation by an illegal dismissal, the employed may entitle himself to the wages for the whole time by being ready to serve, a doctrine would be sanctioned that would be of pernicious consequence, as in the case of a business being discontinued, or a dismissal for misconduct without legal proof." (And see the observations of Erle, J., in Beckham v. Drake, 2 H. L. C. 606).

There are two cases (Aspden v. Austin, 5 Q. B. 671, and Dunn v. Sayles, Id. 685) cited in Emmens v. Elderton which were questioned*, but not distinctly overruled. It is, however, difficult to reconcile them with the principle of that decision. Parke, B., indeed, in delivering the judgment of the Court of Error, (6 C. B. 187), and in his opinion before the House of Lords, (4 H. L. C. 669, 670), held that Aspden v. Austin and Dunn v. Sayles were clearly distinguishable from the case then before the Court: the former on the ground, that if the Court had there held that the defendant had contracted to continue to employ the plaintiff for the term of three years, the defendant would have been obliged, at however great a loss, to continue his business for that time; and the latter upon a similar ground, and also that in the indenture sued upon in that case the words "it is agreed," which would make the stipulation the agreement of both parties, were wanting. It is at least questionable whether the distinctions taken by the learned baron are satisfactory. In Aspden v.

* See the opinions of Erle and Crompton, JJ.

Austin, by an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff agreed to manufacture for the defendant cement of a certain quality; and the defendant, on condition of the plaintiff performing such engagement, promised to pay him 4*l.* weekly during the first two years following the date of the agreement, and 5*l.* weekly during the third year, and also to take him into partnership as a manufacturer of cement at the end of the term; and the breach assigned was, that the defendant refused to permit the plaintiff to continue in the service of the defendant during the three years. The Court held that the agreement did not raise an implied promise that the defendant would continue the plaintiff in his service during the three years, or any part thereof; though the defendant was bound by the express words to pay the plaintiff the stipulated wages during that period, if the plaintiff served, or was ready to serve, according to his contract. And Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "The breach here assigned by the plaintiff assumes that the defendant, at however great loss to himself, was bound to continue his business for three years; but the defendant has not covenanted to do so; he has covenanted only to pay weekly sums for three years to the plaintiff on condition of his performing what on his part he has made a condition precedent; and the plaintiff will be entitled to recover those sums, whether he performs that or not, so long as he is ready, and willing, and offers to perform it, and is prevented only by the defendant from doing it. This, then, is the safe rule for determining the rights of these parties between each other, and no injustice follows to the plaintiff. If he should assign a breach in the non-payment of the weekly sums, it would be no answer for the defendant to say that he had discontinued the business and dismissed the plaintiff; the reply would be, that he might indeed, if he pleased, do both, but that he was still bound to make the payment which he had expressly covenanted to make." It is submitted, that it is scarcely correct to say that the breach in this case assumed that by the agreement the defendant bound or obliged himself to carry on his business for three years; for if the defendant at any time abandoned his business, he would not be liable to be sued by the plaintiff in terms for such abandonment; the only effect of such a course would be to render him liable to an action by the plaintiff for refusing to continue him in the service, and the measure of damages which the plaintiff would recover would be the loss which he sustained by his dismissal. It is true, that if the defendant ceased to carry on the business he could not perform his contract to employ the plaintiff in that business; but, as observed by Lord Denman, (5 Q. B. 683), "it would be an extension of the principle of Sampson v. Easterly, (6 Bing. 644), Saltoun v. Houston, (1 Bing. 433), and other cases cited in the argument, to hold, that where parties have expressly covenanted to perform certain acts, they must be held to have impliedly covenanted for every act convenient or even necessary for the perfect performance of their express covenants." And the covenant by the defendant to carry on the business would seem to be in its nature more extensive than a mere covenant to employ the plaintiff in the business, though as between the plaintiff and the defendant the damages arising from a breach of either covenant would be the same. But even assuming that if the Court had construed the agreement as amounting to a covenant to employ, such a construction must necessarily have raised an implied contract to continue the business, it is difficult to see how that could afford any ground for presuming an intention on the part of the defendant to covenant only for the payment of wages, and not to employ; for if the defendant must be taken to have known that the effect of covenanting to employ in the particular business for three years would be to raise an implied contract to carry on the business, he must be presumed to be also cognisant of the consequences of a breach of his covenants. Now, as between the contracting parties in an agreement for the plaintiff to serve and the defendant to employ and pay wages, whether the plaintiff sued for a breach of the contract to employ, or on the implied covenant to carry on the business, the damage sustained by the plaintiff would be precisely the same, the only loss sustained by the plaintiff by the abandonment of the business being the loss of his employment. As, therefore, in such an agreement, the injury to the defendant, in case of a breach of the supposed implied covenant to carry on the business, would not exceed the injury which he would sustain from the breach of the covenant to employ, there does not appear to be any sufficient reason for saying that the circumstance, that an implied covenant to carry on the business arises, negatives an intention to enter into a contract to continue the plaintiff in the defendant's service, any more than the implication of a contract simply to employ would do. For a breach of either of these covenants, all that the plaintiff could obtain would be damages for his dismissal; and whether that dismissal was caused by the defendant giving up his business, or by any other cause, the damages would be the same; and these damages, in the great majority of cases at least, must be less than the salary, which, according to the doctrine laid down in Aspdin v. Austin, the plaintiff might sue for from time to time until the end of the term. The inconvenience and hardship to the master is increased instead of diminished by compelling him, in the event of his giving up his business, to pay his workmen the full amount of salary for the period of their engagements, instead of the smaller amount, which in most cases would compensate them for the loss sustained by their dismissal. The inconvenience to the public, and to the servant himself, arising out of such a doctrine, has been already pointed out in the passages cited from the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Elderton v. Emmens, and the observations of Erle and Crompton, JJ., in the House of Lords. Dunn v. Sayles was decided upon precisely the same ground as Aspdin v. Austin, and for the same reasons as those above urged it is submitted that it must be considered as substantially overruled, and not distinguishable from, Emmens v. Elderton. With respect to the other ground on which this case was distinguished by Parke, B., viz. the omission of the words "it is agreed," it must be remarked, that in Emmens v. Elderton those words were no doubt most important, for the agreement was simply that the plaintiff should receive and accept a salary of 100*l.* a year; and without the words, "it is agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that" &c., there would have been no covenant by the defendant even to pay the salary, from which alone the covenant to continue the plaintiff in the service, so as to enable him to earn the salary, could be implied; but in Dunn v. Sayles there was an express covenant by the defendant to pay the plaintiff wages, and it is from the covenant to pay wages for services, that, according to Emmens v. Elderton, the implied covenant by the employer to continue the employed in the service arises. Parke, B., in his opinion in the House of Lords, (4 H. L. C. 667), himself says, "I think that there is clearly implied, on the part of the person who contracts to pay a salary for services for a term, a contract to permit those services to be performed, in order that the stipulated reward may be earned, besides an agreement to pay the salary at the end of the term." In Sykes v. Dixon, (9 Ad. & El. 693), there being only an agreement by A. to serve B. for twelve months, without any contract by B. to employ A., the Court held the agreement void for want of mutuality; but in that case there was no contract by B. to pay wages for the service, from which a covenant to employ could be implied. The recent case of Reg. v. Welch (22 L. J., M. C., 145) decides that where, in a contract to serve for a term, the wages to be paid to the servant for such service are not a fixed sum, but are to be measured by the amount of work done, the fact that the wages are so made dependent on the work done raises an implied obligation on the part of the employer to find a reasonable quantity of work for the servant, for otherwise the employer would be under no obligation to pay the servant any wages. (And see Pilkington v. Scott, 15 M. & W. 657).

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT.—May 18.

[Before Mr. Commissioner MURPHY.]

In re HORATIO CLAGETT.

A rule in this case was argued some time since, calling upon the assignees, under a petition in this court of 1836, to shew cause why they should not execute a re-assignment to the insolvent of his estate, and why the warrant of attorney executed by him at his discharge should not be cancelled, or satisfaction entered up on the judgment obtained upon that warrant of attorney. The insolvent petitioned in the year 1836, and was discharged upon executing the usual documents. Since then he was made a bankrupt, and obtained his certificate; whereupon the present application was made, under the 62nd section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, it being contended that the certificate granted under the 200th section of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act was a full discharge of prior existing claims.

Sargood, in support of the rule.

Nichols and Reed, contra.

Mr. Commissioner MURPHY to-day gave his judgment, after consulting the other members of the Court, whose opinion, he said, fully coincided with his own. He was of opinion that the meaning of the word "discharge," in the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 200, was merely to relieve the bankrupt from all process in respect of the debts, but not to extinguish the debts themselves. Upon a careful comparison of the various clauses of the Bankrupt Act and of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, he arrived at the conclusion that the debts were not discharged and satisfied by the certificate in bankruptcy, and for that reason the rule must be discharged.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—May 18.

STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

The Lord Chancellor, in laying upon the table of the House a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the Statute-law Consolidation Board, said he thought a copy ought to be laid before their lordships, inasmuch as one had been moved for in another place. He defended the commissioners from the charge of inactivity, for which he said there was no foundation, the work of consolidation requiring great consideration, and occupying a considerable time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—May 17.

PERSONAL ESTATES OF INTESTATES BILL.

The House went into committee on this bill.

On clause 1 being read,

Mr. Henley asked if the bill had the approval of the Government? It would completely alter the distribution of the personal property of intestates, and he hardly thought it safe to proceed with a measure of so sweeping a character unless it had received the sanction and approval of the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Collier agreed in the two principal objects of the bill, which were to equalise the distribution of the personal estates of intestates throughout the kingdom, and to place the children of a mother dying intestate on the same footing as the children of a father dying intestate.

Mr. Malins said his hon. friend (Mr. L. King) proposed to abolish the customs of London and York, which established a different distribution of the estates of freemen of the city of London and persons residing in the city of York from that which applied in other parts of the kingdom. He (Mr. Malins) agreed in the desirability of abolishing customs that interfered with the general law of the land; and he thought that that part of the bill which related to advancements made to a child by a father, and advancements made by a mother, was also unobjectionable. He was not disposed to dissent from the principle of the bill, but he considered that some of its details, affecting the rights of heirs-at-law, were open to objection.

Mr. L. King expressed his readiness to accede to any suggestions of the hon. and learned gentleman, with the view of amending the clauses to which he had referred. He thought the abolition of the existing customs would place heirs-at-law in a much more favourable position than they held at present.

Mr. Napier considered that it was advisable, whenever it could be done, to have uniformity of legislation for the United Kingdom, and asked whether it was intended that the bill should extend to Ireland?

Sir F. Theiger suggested that some inconvenience would be occasioned if the bill came into operation immediately upon its passing. He thought its operation should be delayed for, say a period of three months, in order that persons who had made dispositions of their property depending on the existing local customs might be enabled, if they thought fit, to alter the distribution of their estates.

Mr. M. Chambers observed that this bill was most admirably drawn, presenting a view of the state of the law which was at once intelligible, not only to lawyers, but also to persons who were not lawyers, and he would recommend it as a model to all parties who were concerned in the preparation of parliamentary bills.

The clause was then agreed to, as were the other clauses of the bill, with some amendments.

On the motion of Sir F. Theiger,

A clause was added to the effect that the bill shall not come into operation till the 1st November, 1855.

GRAND JURIES.

Mr. Bowyer moved for leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the despatch of business before grand juries in England and Wales. He observed that the present practice was to swear witnesses, who had to give evidence before grand juries, in open court, and the consequence was, that these witnesses had to make their way through a crowd to the public crier, by whom the oath was administered, and back again through the crowd to the grand jury room. Thus a great deal of time was wasted, the grand jury was kept waiting, and the oath was administered in a very irreverent manner. To remedy this evil he proposed to give power to the foreman of the grand jury, or to any magistrate upon it, to administer the oath to witnesses.

After a short conversation upon the question whether the introduction of this bill should be postponed until the result of the select committee upon the Public Prosecutors Bill was ascertained, leave was given to bring in the bill.

TYRONE ASSIZES.

Mr. M'Mahon asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether his attention had been called to the trial at the last Tyrone Assizes of two sets of defendants belonging to opposing religious and political parties, for mutual assaults on each other, at the same time and place, and to the course pursued by the public prosecutor employed by the Crown—namely, that though distinct and cross indictments were preferred by the one party against the other, he put both sets of defendants on trial together on the several indictments, and called the witnesses of the respective parties alternately, until the equal number of six had been examined on each side against and for each party, each successive witness plumply contradicting what the preceding witness had sworn, and attributing to the opposite party the violence of which his own side was accused; and to the disapprobation expressed by the judge at the acquittal of the one set of defendants by the jury, contrary to his expectation; and whether such a mode of conducting a prosecution by the public prosecutor in Ireland met with the approbation of the right hon. gentleman?

Mr. Horsman understood the question to refer rather to the system which was pursued in those trials than to the particular trial to which he had alluded. On that occasion the circumstances that occurred were precisely in accordance with what had taken place frequently on former trials. It was a common practice in that part of Ireland that two sets of criminals, under different indictments, were tried by one jury. The attention of the Government had been called to the subject, and he might state that it did not appear to them to be desirable that such a system should be pursued. Instructions would accordingly be given to the Crown counsel not to be a party to such proceedings in future.

Reviews.

Smith's Law of Contracts. Second Edition. By J. J. MALCOLM, Inner Temple.

WE are glad to see a new edition of this most useful elementary work. Written originally, by a gentleman possessing singular precision and clearness of expression, as a series of lectures to students at the Law Institution, at the present moment, when deserved attention is being paid to the legal education of the members of the higher branch of the Profession, a successful introduction into such a work of the recent important cases and changes in the law is a valuable addition to the means of instruction. The object of the present editor seems to have been twofold—first, to present the lectures as nearly as possible as they were originally delivered; and, secondly, to interweave such important cases as have since arisen illustrating the principles and the statutory changes in the law. In the execution of the first part of his task he has given a short account of the cases cited by Mr. Smith, who was in the habit of referring to them as he proceeded with his lecture. The mere citation of the name of the case to a student, who has seldom a library, and whose mind would only be perplexed by the details in the reports, was evidently a defect in the original publication, and this is now repaired. The second part of Mr. Malcolm's undertaking has been most satisfactorily performed. The great error in editing works of this elementary character is the overlaying of them with references. As a book laying down and illustrating principles, the grand object is to cite only those cases which exemplify it most prominently to the mind. The selection in this respect has been happily made; and the mistake which was committed in the original edition, of introducing a large number of cases and discussing nicer points, has been judiciously avoided. The cases, too, are interwoven with the text, the new parts being distinguished by brackets, and the interruption to which the change of style and position of matter subjected the reader is no longer felt. The new portions are well and clearly expressed, and afford ample information for the student. We congratulate Mr. Malcolm upon having produced the book in a form well calculated to secure for it a place among the treatises which persons intrusted with the conduct of legal education can safely use as class-books upon the most important branches of the law.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

III.—JUDGES, OFFICERS, AND ADVOCATES.

High Bailiff.

To each court at least one high bailiff is appointed. As in the case of the clerk, one high bailiff is sometimes appointed to several courts.

Qualification.—No especial qualification is required for the person filling the office.

How appointed.—The high bailiff is appointed by the judge, by order of court.

How removeable.—This officer may be removed by the Lord Chancellor or the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster respectively, at his discretion.

Security.—The high bailiff is bound to give security in the same form and for the same matters as the clerk.

Disqualification.—When appointed, he is not permitted, directly or indirectly, to be engaged as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in the court.

Duties.—The duties of the high bailiff are—to attend every sitting of the court for such time as shall be required by the judge, unless when his absence is allowed for reasonable cause by the judge; to serve all summonses and orders, and to execute all warrants, precepts, and writs issued from the court; to conform to the Rules of Practice regulating the proceedings of the court; and, subject to them, to obey the order and direction of the judge. The Rules of Practice, as in the case of the clerk, prescribe certain minute regulations for the convenient conduct of the office. He also acts as messenger in protection and insolvency cases.

Liability.—He is responsible for the acts and defaults of himself and his assistant bailiffs, in like manner as the sheriff of any county in England is responsible for the acts and defaults of himself and his officers.

Sub-bailiffs.—The high bailiff is empowered to appoint, in writing, a sufficient number of able and fit persons, not exceeding such number as the judge shall allow, to assist him in his office. These sub-bailiffs are liable to be dismissed at the pleasure of the high bailiff, or to be suspended or dismissed by the judge.

Remuneration.—This officer is remunerated by the fees allowed by the statutes and the Secretary of State's orders in respect of the proceedings of the court. He is bound to provide for the execution of the duties of the office out of the fees thus allowed. The Government has power to put this officer on salary.

Treasurer.

Qualification—Security.—The treasurer is an officer of the county court appointed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and removeable at their pleasure. No special qualification appears to be necessary to enable a person to accept this office. He is bound to give security for the same matters as the clerk or high bailiff. The number of these officers is twenty-three.

Disqualification.—The treasurer cannot act as an attorney or agent, directly or indirectly, for any party in any proceeding in the court.

Duties.—To each is assigned a certain number of districts within which his duties are to be performed. These duties consist in auditing half-yearly, quarterly, or oftener if necessary, the accounts of the clerk of the court connected with the ordinary duties of his office, as well as those incident to the office of registrar and official assignee in protection cases; in receiving the balances of the various monies properly to be paid over to him; in paying the judges their salaries and travelling expenses; in disposing of the balance remaining in his hands as directed by the Commissioners of the Treasury; and in submitting annually to the audit board an account of his receipts and disbursements, with proper vouchers in respect of them. The account is then audited, and a statement of it transmitted to the Commissioners of the Treasury, who, after considering it, give directions as to the making up and passing of the account. It is then signed by two commissioners of audit, who are empowered to sign a certificate in the nature of a quietus, which operates as an effectual discharge to the treasurer, and to all other intents and purposes. Besides the duties already described peculiarly relating to the supervision of the clerk's accounts, other duties devolve on the treasurer with reference to the courts. He is required, with the approval of one of the Secretaries of State, to build, purchase, hire, or otherwise provide messuages and lands, with all necessary appurtenances, for holding the court, and for the offices connected therewith; or, instead of providing separate buildings, he may contract with the proper persons for the use and occupation of such hall or other building as may be necessary for the purpose of the court and officers, and subject to such conditions as to rent, and repairs, alterations, and improvements, as may be agreed on. He is also empowered, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, to borrow money at interest for the above purposes; and such contracts are binding on him and his successors in office. All the real and personal property belonging to the court are vested in the treasurer for the time being and his successors, in trust for the purposes of the court.

Remuneration.—The remuneration of this officer is by a salary determined as to its amount by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and that salary was originally charged on the Consolidated Fund, but is now voted annually; the salary varies in amount from £500. to £7000. Besides his salary, he receives certain allowances for his travelling expenses incurred in proceeding to the several courts on his audit.

Non-joinder of Offices.—No two of the offices of clerk, high bailiff, and treasurer can be held by the same person.

Advocates.

Counsel, Attornies, or other Advocates.—Proceedings in the county court are, as a general rule, conducted by the parties in person. It is competent, however, for any party, as a matter of right, to appear by counsel and attorney, or by counsel only, or attorney only, such attorney not acting for another attorney in the conduct of the suit in court. It is, however, a matter of discretion with the judge whether the costs incurred in obtaining professional assistance shall be allowed as costs in the cause. It is competent for the judge, if he sees fit upon the hearing, to permit any person other than the advocates already mentioned to appear for parties in the cause.

Employed exceptionally.—With respect to employing an attorney or counsel antecedent or subsequent to the hearing, the costs of that employment cannot, even at the discretion of the judge, be allowed as costs in the cause. To employ a barrister or an attorney in the conduct of a cause in the county court is consequently exceptional.

IV.—PROCEDURE.

We will now describe the procedure of the court in the different matters within its original and auxiliary jurisdiction, whether legal or equitable.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

LEGAL JURISDICTION.

Dividing Demands.—A plaintiff having one entire demand, which exceeds in amount that to which the jurisdiction extends, will not be permitted to divide it into several parts in order to bring each within the jurisdiction, and thus recover the whole; but he is at liberty in such a case to abandon a part of his claim, so as to bring the residue within the jurisdiction, and then the judgment for the smaller sum operates as a satisfaction of the whole cause of action.

Venue.

It will be convenient to state here the law relating to venue, as it exists in the county courts.

Explanation of Terms.—Previously to doing so, it is necessary to explain that the county court in which a party is sued is called "the home court;" and every other county court, when spoken of relatively to this court, is called "the foreign court;" and the districts in which these courts are held are respectively called "the home district" and "the foreign district."

Defendant's Place of Residence or Business generally determines Venue.—The general rule is, that the dwelling-place or place of business of the defendant determines the district in which the suit is to be commenced. Where there are several defendants, any one of them may be sued in the district wherein he dwells or carries on business at the time of bringing the action. Where the defendant, or one of several defendants, has dwelt or carried on business at some time within six calendar months next before the time of bringing the action, or the cause of the action arose in one district and the defendant resides or carries on business in another, the plaintiff may, by leave of the court, sue in the former. Where, however, the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the whole or a material part of the plaintiff's cause of action did not arise within the district in which the defendant resides or carries on business at the time of bringing the action, or where an officer of the court is a party to the proceedings, unless in the last-mentioned case the proceedings relate to goods taken in execution under process of the court, the plaintiff is at liberty to proceed in the superior courts without incurring the penalty of losing his costs. The defendant's place of abode or business, therefore, at the time of bringing the action is the leading fact in determining the district in which he is to be sued. The same principle is preserved in proceedings against the person of a defendant, who can only be imprisoned in respect of a judgment by order of the court of that district in which he dwells or carries on business at the time of taking those proceedings. The court in which the judgment was obtained is immaterial for that purpose, unless where the commitment takes place at the time of the trial, as hereafter shewn.

Parties.

Infant.—In the county court, as in other courts, all persons who labour under no disability are permitted to sue and be sued; but a peculiarity exists there with respect to plaintiffs, which is, that an infant may sue in his own person for wages or piece work, or for work done as a servant, in the same manner as if of full age. This privilege does not apply to other claims, which must be sued for in the usual way by prochein amy or guardian.

Parties—Contracts—Plaintiffs.—When it is sought to enforce a contract, the same rules prevail with respect to parties as in the superior courts of common law.

Defendants.—Any one of the defendants may, however, be sued, at the option of the plaintiff, as no objection on the ground of non-joinder is allowed. If, however, too many persons are made defendants, it is a ground of nonsuit.

Torts.—The rules prevailing in the superior courts as to parties in actions of tort are adopted in the county court.

Amendment.—Such powers of amendment are conferred on the judges, that a mistake in making the proper persons parties to the suit seldom produces either inconvenience or injustice to the suitors, either in actions of contract or tort.

(To be continued).

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Malins and Mr. Whiteside)

To enable Infants, with the Approbation of the Court of Chancery, to make binding Settlements of their Real and Personal Estate on Marriage.

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for every infant, upon or in contemplation of his or her marriage, with the sanction of the Court of Chancery, to make a valid and binding settlement, or contract for a settlement, of all or any part of his or her property, whether real or personal, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy; and every conveyance and assignment of such real or personal estate, or contract to make a conveyance or assignment thereof, executed by such infant, with the approbation of the said court, for the purpose of giving effect to such settlement, shall be as valid and effectual as if the person executing the same were of the full age of twenty-one years.

2. The sanction of the Court of Chancery to any such settlement, or contract for a settlement, may be given, upon petition presented by the infant, or his or her guardian, in a summary way, without the institution of a suit.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

Intituled "An Act to facilitate Leases and Sales of Settled Estates."

Sect. 1. The word "settlement," as used in this act, shall signify any act of Parliament, deed, agreement, copy of court roll, will, or other instrument, or any number of such instruments, under or by virtue of which any hereditaments of any tenure stand limited to or in trust for any persons, by way of succession, including any such instruments affecting the estates of any one or more of such persons exclusively; and the term "settled estates," as used in this act, shall signify all hereditaments of any tenure which are the subject of a settlement: and for the purposes of this act a tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct shall be deemed to be a tenant for life.

2. It shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this act contained, to authorise leases of any settled estates, or of any rights or privileges over or affecting any settled estates, for any purpose whatsoever, whether involving waste or not, provided the following conditions be observed:—

First, every such lease shall be made to take effect in possession, and shall be for a term of years not exceeding, for an agricultural lease, fourteen years; for a mining lease, or a lease of water, wayleaves, waterleaves, or other rights or easements, forty years; and for a building lease ninety-nine years, except only in cases where the court shall be satisfied that it is the usual custom of the district to grant building leases for longer terms:

Secondly, on every such lease shall be reserved the best rent, or reservation in the nature of rent, either uniform or not, that can be reasonably obtained, without taking any fine, or other benefit in the nature of a fine:

Thirdly, where the lease is of any earth, coal, stone, or mineral, a certain portion of the whole rent or payment reserved shall be from time to time set aside and invested as hereinafter mentioned; namely, when and so long as the person for the time being entitled to the receipt of such rent is a person who, by reason of his estate, or by virtue of any declaration in the settlement, is entitled to work such earth, coal, stone, or mineral for his own benefit, one fourth part of such rent, and otherwise three fourth parts thereof; and in every such lease sufficient provision shall be made to insure such application of the aforesaid portion of the rent, by the appointment of trustees, or otherwise, as the court shall deem expedient:

Fourthly, no such lease shall authorise the felling of any trees, except so far as shall be necessary for the purpose of clearing the ground for any buildings, excavations, or other works authorised by the lease:

Fifthly, every such lease shall be by deed, and the lessee shall execute a counterpart thereof; and every such lease shall contain a condition for re-entry on non-payment of the rent within a period of not less than twenty-eight days after it becomes due.

3. Subject and in addition to the conditions hereinbefore mentioned, every such lease shall contain such covenants, conditions, and stipulations as the court shall deem expedient with reference to the special circumstances of the demise.

4. The power to authorise leases conferred by this act shall extend to authorise leases either of the whole or any parts of the settled estates, and may be exercised from time to time.

5. Any leases granted under this act may be surrendered, either for the purpose of obtaining a renewal of the same or not; and the power to authorise leases conferred by this act shall extend to authorise new leases of the whole or any part of the hereditaments comprised in any surrendered lease, subject as aforesaid.

6. The power to authorise leases conferred by this act shall extend to authorise preliminary contracts to grant any such leases; and any of the terms of such contracts may be varied in the leases.

7. The power to authorise leases conferred on the Court of Chancery by this act may be exercised either by approving of particular leases or by ordering that general powers of leasing shall be vested in trustees in manner hereinafter mentioned.

8. When application is made to the court, either to authorise a particular lease, or to vest any general powers of leasing in trustees, the court shall require the applicant to produce such evidence as it shall deem sufficient to enable it to ascertain the nature, value, and circumstances of the estate, and the terms and conditions on which leases thereof ought to be authorised.

9. When a particular lease or contract for a lease has been approved of by the court, the court shall direct what person or persons shall execute the same as lessor; and the lease or contract executed by such person or persons shall take effect in all respects as if he or they was or were at the time of the execution thereof absolutely entitled to the whole estate or interest which is bound by the settlement, and had immediately afterwards settled the same according to the settlement, and so as to operate (if necessary) by way of revocation and appointment of the use, or otherwise, as the court shall direct.

10. Where the court shall deem it expedient that any general powers of leasing any settled estates should be vested in trustees, it may by order vest any such power accordingly, either in the existing trustees of the settlement or any other persons; and such powers, when exercised by such trustees, shall take effect in all respects as if the power so vested in them had been originally contained in the settlement, and so as to operate (if necessary) by way of revocation and appointment of the use, or otherwise, as the court shall direct; and in every such case the court, if it shall think fit, may impose any conditions as to consents or otherwise on the exercise of such power; and the court may also authorise the insertion of provisions for the appointment of new trustees from time to time for the purpose of exercising such powers of leasing as aforesaid.

11. It shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this act contained, from time to time to authorise a sale of the whole or any parts of any settled estates, or of any timber (not being ornamental timber) growing on any settled estates, and every such sale shall be conducted and confirmed in the same manner as by the rules and practice of the court for the time being is or shall be required in the sale of lands sold under a decree of the court.

12. When any land is sold for building purposes, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall see fit, to allow the whole or any part of the consideration to be a fee-farm rent issuing out of such land, which may be secured and settled in such manner as the court shall approve.

13. On any sale of land, any earth, coal, stone, or mineral may be excepted, and any rights or privileges may be reserved, and the purchaser may be required to enter into any covenants, or submit to any restrictions, which the court may deem advisable.

14. It shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, subject to the provisions and restrictions in this act contained, from time to time to direct that any part of any settled estates be laid out for streets, roads, or paths, drains, or watercourses, either to be dedicated to the public or not; and the court may direct that the parts so laid out shall remain vested in the trustees of the settlement, or be conveyed to and vested in any other trustees, upon such trusts for securing the continued appropriation thereof to the purposes aforesaid in all respects, and with such provisions for the appointment of new trustees when required, as by the court shall be deemed advisable.

15. On every sale or dedication to be effected as hereinbefore mentioned the court may direct what person or persons shall execute the deed of conveyance; and the deed executed by such person or persons shall take effect as if the settlement had contained a power enabling such person or persons to effect such sale or dedication, and so as to operate (if necessary) by way of revocation and appointment of the use, or otherwise, as the court shall direct.

16. Any person entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of any settled estates for an estate for life, or any greater estate, may apply to the Court of Chancery, by petition in a summary way, to exercise the powers conferred by this act.

17. Subject to the exception contained in the next section, every application to the court must be made with the concurrence or consent of the following parties; namely,

Where there is no tenant in tail under the settlement in existence, then the parties to concur or consent shall be all the persons in existence having any beneficial estate or interest under or by virtue of the settlement, and also all trustees having any estate or interest on behalf of any unborn children;

And where there is a tenant in tail under the settlement in existence, then the parties to concur or consent shall be such tenant in tail, and all persons in existence having any beneficial estate or interest, under or by virtue of the settlement, prior to the estate of such tenant in tail, and all trustees having any estate or interest on behalf of any unborn children prior to the estate of such tenant in tail.

18. Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, to give effect to any petition, subject to and so as not to affect the rights, estate, or interest of any person (not being a tenant in tail) whose consent or concurrence has been refused or cannot be obtained, or whose rights, estate, or interest ought, in the opinion of the court, to be excepted.

19. In case any person, whose consent to an application would be necessary under the provisions herein contained, shall be born after the petition shall have been presented, such application may be proceeded with and disposed of as if such person was still unborn.

20. Notice of any application to the court under this act shall be served on all trustees who are seised or possessed of any estate in trust for any person whose consent or concurrence to or in the application is hereby required, and on any other parties who, in the opinion of the court, ought to be so served, unless the court shall think fit to dispense with such notice.

21. The court shall direct that some sufficient notice of any exercise of any of the powers conferred on it by this act shall be placed on the settlement, or on any copies thereof, or otherwise recorded, in any way it may think proper, in all cases where it shall appear to the court to be practicable and expedient, for preventing fraud or mistake.

22. All monies to be received on any sale effected under the authority of this act, or to be set aside out of the rent or payment reserved on any lease of earth, coal, stone, or minerals as aforesaid, may, if the court shall think fit, be paid to any trustees of whom it shall approve, and shall by such trustees be paid, applied, and laid out in the manner directed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, "with respect to purchase money or compensation coming to parties having a limited interest," or as near thereto as circumstances will admit, without applying to the court; or if the court shall not think fit to authorise the payment of such monies to any trustees as aforesaid, the same shall be paid into the Bank of England, to the account of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, ex parte the applicant in the matter of this act, and shall be paid, applied, and laid out in the manner directed by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit; but so, nevertheless, that all such monies, though not exceeding 20l., shall be applied as by the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act is directed with respect to sums exceeding 200l.

23. The Court of Chancery shall be at liberty to exercise any of the powers conferred on it by this act, whether the settlement shall contain powers to effect similar purposes or not, and whether the court shall have already exercised any of the powers conferred by this act in respect of the same property or not; but no such powers shall be exercised if the settlement contains an express declaration or manifest intention that they shall not be exercised.

24. Nothing in this act shall be construed to empower the Court of Chancery to authorise any lease, sale, or other act, beyond the extent to which, in the opinion of the court, the same might have been authorised in and by the settlement by the settlor or settlors.

25. After the completion of any lease or sale, or other act, under the authority of the court, in professed pursuance of this act, the same shall not be invalidated on the ground that the court was not hereby empowered to authorise the same; nor on the ground that the estates thereby affected were not settled estates within the meaning of this act; except that no such lease, sale, or other act shall have any effect against any person whose concurrence in or consent to the application ought to have been obtained, and was not obtained.

26. It shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think fit, to order that all or any costs or expenses of all or any parties of and incident to any application under this act shall be a charge on the hereditaments which are the subject of this application, or on any other hereditaments included in the same settlement; and the court may also direct that such costs and expenses shall be raised by sale or mortgage of a sufficient part of such hereditaments, or out of the rents or profits thereof, such costs and expenses to be taxed as the court shall direct.

27. The Chancery judges may make general rules and orders.

28. Rules and orders to be laid before Parliament.

29. It shall be lawful for any person entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of any settled estates for an estate for life or for any greater estate, either in his own right or in right of his wife, and also for any person entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of any unsettled estates as tenant by the courtesy, or in dower, or in right of a wife who is seised in fee, to demise the same or any part thereof from time to time for any term not exceeding fourteen years in possession, unless the settlement shall contain an express declaration that it shall not be lawful for such person to make such demise; provided that every such demise be made by deed, and the best rent that can reasonably be obtained be thereby reserved, without any fine, or other benefit in the nature of a fine, which rent shall be incident to the immediate reversion; and provided that such demise be not made without impeachment of waste, and do contain a condition of re-entry on non-payment within a time not less than twenty-eight days of the rent thereby reserved, and a non-observance of the covenants or conditions therein contained, and provided a counterpart of every deed of lease be made and executed by the lessee.

30. Every demise authorised by the last preceding section shall be valid against the person granting the same, and all other persons entitled to estates subsequent to the estate of such person under or by virtue of the same settlement, if the estates be settled; and in the case of unsettled estates, against all persons claiming through or under the wife or husband (as the case may be) of the person granting the same.

31. Repeal of the 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, except as to ecclesiastical leases.

32. Powers, applications, and consents may be exercised, made, or given by guardians, committees of lunatics, and assignees of bankrupts or insolvents; but as to infant or lunatic tenants in tail, not without the special direction of the court.

33. Married women to be separately examined, even in case of separate estate, and may apply or consent notwithstanding restraint on anticipation.

34. The examination of married women may be by the court, or by some solicitor duly appointed to administer oaths in Chancery.

35. Subject to such examination as aforesaid, married women may make or consent to any applications, whether they be of full age or infants.

36. Nothing in this act shall be construed to create any obligation, at law or in equity, on any person to make or consent to any application to the court, or to exercise any power.

37. For the purposes of this act a person shall be deemed to be entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of estates, although his estate may be charged or incumbered either by himself or by the settlor, or otherwise howsoever, to any extent; and any lease or sale authorised by this act may be made either subject to any such charge or incumbrance, or freed therefrom with the concurrence of the party entitled thereto.

38. Provided always, that nothing in this act shall authorise any sale or lease beyond the term of fourteen years of any settled estates in which, under the act of the 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 20, "to imber feigned recovery of lands wherein the King is in reversion," or under any other act of Parliament, the tenants in tail are restrained from barring or defeating their estates tail; but the timber on any such last-mentioned estates may be sold under this act.

39. Nothing in this act shall authorise the granting of a lease of any copyhold or customary hereditaments not warranted by the custom of the manor without the consent of the lord, nor otherwise prejudice or affect the rights of any lord of a manor.

40. The provisions of this act shall extend to all settlements, whether made before or after it shall come in force, except those as to demises to be made without application to the court, which shall extend only to settlements made after this act shall come in force.

41. This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

42. This act shall come in force on the 1st January, 1856.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future Insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the Profits, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE OF PREMIUM without participation of Profits.

The next Division of Profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all Participating Policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the Profits.

At the several past Divisions of Profits made by this Company, the Reversionary Bonuses added to the Policies from ONE-HALF the Profits amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about One per Cent. per Annum on the sums insured, and the total Bonuses added at the four Septennial Divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Extra Premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their Lives at the Tabular Premiums may have their Lives insured at extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such Policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written Notices of, received and registered.

Medical fees paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for Policy Stamps.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances effected upon every description of property at the usual rates.

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK; this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorise any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. R. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

* * To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

In the preferable part of the Strand, near to Somerset-house.—Capital Freehold Estate, let on lease to Mr. Eve at 153l. per annum.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12 at 12, a very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, situate on the south side of the Strand, in the parish of St. Clement Danes, consisting of a residence and shop, No. 165 A, let on lease for 21 years from 1854 to Mr. Eve, tea-dealer and grocer; a highly respectable tenant, subject to a yearly rent of 150l., and 3d. in lieu of land tax.

May be viewed by permission of the tenant, and particulars had, ten days prior to the sale, of Frederick Farrar, Esq., solicitor, 19, Goddismans-street, Doctors' Commons; at Garraway's; and of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Very valuable Freehold Estates, Strand and Temple-bar, producing about 630l. per annum, part of the estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12, at 12 o'clock, in lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, viz.:—The New Barn public-house and wine-vaults, in St. Clement's churchyard, in the Strand, let on lease, expiring 1856, at 150l. per annum. Nos. 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 15, and 16, Great Shire-lane, and Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Brick-court, on leases and agreements, at rents amounting to 170l. per annum. No. 37, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Mr. W. Stevens, as a printing office, at 65l. per annum; and 39, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Messrs. Richard Stevens and G. S. Norton, at 65l. per annum. The dwelling-house and printing-offices, 38, Bell-yard, and 10, Great Shire-lane, in the occupation of Messrs. Roworth and Sons, at 171l. per annum, and ground in the rear of 41 and 42, Bell-yard. The properties may be viewed by permission of the respective tenants.

Particulars are now ready, and may be had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 9, Chancery-lane; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Essex.—In the parish of Magdalen Laver, easy distances from Harlow, and the capital Market Towns of Epping, Bishop Stortford, and Ongar, very desirable and compact Freehold Estate, called Spencer's Farm, with upwards of 126 acres of productive Land.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, a very desirable FREEHOLD ESTATE, called Spencer's Farm, land-tax redeemed, partly adjoining the high road from Epping to Harlow, six miles from the former, five from the latter, and six and eight miles respectively from the capital market towns of Ongar and Bishop Stortford; comprising a capital farm-house, garden, warm yards, all suitable and well-arranged agricultural buildings, and 126A. 1s. 30p. of productive arable and pasture land, lying within a ring fence. The lands are in a high state of cultivation, the pastures are bounded by a stream, and lie well for irrigation. There are several ponds on the property, and it has been in the occupation for upwards of twenty years of the late Mr. John Larter, a highly-respectable and intelligent farmer, and now of his executors.

May be viewed, and particulars, with plans, had at the farm; at the George and Green Man Inns, Harlow; Cock-Epping; Crown, Ongar; White Lion, Sawbridgeworth; the George, Bishop Stortford; of Mr. R. P. Browne, land agent, Great Hallingbury; and in London, of Messrs. Denton, Kinderley, Domville, and Lawrence, 6, New-square, Lincoln's-inn at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Hammersmith.—Very valuable Copyhold Estates, producing about 160l. per annum, part of the Estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12, at 12, in lots, a very valuable COPY-

HOLD ESTATE, situate in the High-street, Hammersmith, near the Broadway, comprising three capital Houses and Shops, with large gardens, in the occupations of Mr. Lacey, grocer, and Mr. Barker, upholsterer, at rents amounting to 182l. 10s. per annum; also a very valuable piece of Copyhold Ground, now used as a market garden, in the rear of the foregoing, and having frontage to, and entrance from, Great Church-lane, adapted for building purposes. The property is copyhold of the Manor of Fulham, subject to a quit-rent of 2s. per annum, and the land-tax is redeemed.

May be viewed by permission of the tenants, and particulars had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 9, Chancery-lane; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Wiltshire.—Very valuable Church Preferment, amounting to nearly 1500l. per annum; the Incumbent aged 70 years.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, (unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract), the very valuable NEXT PRESENTATION (subject to the life of the incumbent, aged 70 years) to the RECTORY of Pewsey, situate about seven miles from Marlborough, twelve from Devizes, thirty from Bath, and fourteen from the Great Western Station at Hungerford; consisting of an excellent residence, with offices, garden, and 124A. 2s. 1p. of glebe land. Also the commuted Rent-charge in lieu of the great and small tithes of the parish, containing about 4000 acres. The gross annual value is 1464l. 11s. 7d.

Descriptive particulars may be had, 31 days previous to the sale, of Messrs. Blake, Tylee, and Tylee, 14, Essex-street, Strand; at the Bear Inn, Devizes; Ailesbury Arms, Marlborough; White Hart, Bath; Angel, Oxford; Bull, Cambridge; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Albury, Herts, five miles from the Railway at Bishop Stortford.—Freehold and small part Copyhold Farm, called "Piggotts," the Fox Public-house, and sundry Inclosures of detached Lands; the whole containing 196 acres.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed by the Trustees to SELL BY AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, in seven lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, situate about five miles from the Railway Station at Bishop Stortford, ten from Ware, twelve from Hertford, and adjoining the Kennel of the Puckeridge Hounds, in the parishes of Albury, Little Hadham, and Braughing, viz.:—Piggotts Farm, comprising a comfortable farm-house, (suitable for a dwelling box), good garden, orchard, warm farm-yard, with extensive stabling, wheat, oat, and barley barns, cow-houses, cattle and cart sheds, and 183 acres of productive arable and pasture land, lying very compact, chiefly under-drained, and partly title-free. The Fox licensed public-house, adjoining the high road, with offices and gardens. A plot of detached Arable Land, situate in Molly Chips Common. Two Inclosures in Parsonage Common, near Parsonage Farm, and abutting on Albury Park. A plot of Arable Land, situate in Ham's Common; and a very valuable inclosure of Land, abutting on the road from Little Hadham to Standon, and adjoining the lands of the Marquis of Salisbury and Mr. Chapman, known as Priory Leys. The whole estate comprises about 196 acres, and is in the occupation of Mr. Peter Sullens, a most respectable tenant, on lease, which will expire on the 29th September, 1857, at the very low rent of 185l. per annum.

May be viewed, and particulars, with plans, had of the tenant; at the Fox, on the estate; George, Bishop Stortford; Saracen's Head, Ware; Salisbury Arms, Hertford; and in London, of D. S. Bocket, Esq., solicitor, 60, Lincoln's-inn-fields; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, 6, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Islington, close to the Parish Church, in the High-street, and extending behind the Upper-terraces.—Highly valuable and important Building Land, comprising about Three Acres, and Blacksmith's Shop, &c.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, in lots, a highly valuable and important PROPERTY, comprising about three acres of building land, and the only uncovered land so close to the metropolis, situate abutting on the High-street, Islington, to which there is a frontage of 300 feet, extending in the rear behind Upper-terraces, and close to the parish church. The property is copyhold of the manor of Canonbury, subject to a trifling quit-rent, and a fine on death or alienation of 6s. 8d. per house, or 6s. 8d. per acre for land; so is equal in value to freehold, and the cost of enfranchisement would be nearly nominal. There is a lease upon the property, which has six years and three quarters to run; consequently the reversion after the expiration of that lease is intended only to be sold.

The plans published with the particulars will shew the great capabilities of the property for building purposes, and both may be had, 31 days prior to the sale, at the Angel, Islington; of Messrs. Whitbread and Smith, solicitors, Lincoln's-inn-fields; of Mr. George Smith, architect, Mercers' hall; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 2, 1855.

THE conflict of jurisdiction which prevails between the insolvent courts and the county courts is not only an anomaly in itself, but is also practically unjust in its consequences. The result of the present state of things in this respect is this—a man takes the benefit of the Insolvent Act, whereby, having given up all his property, he is discharged from his debts. Notwithstanding such discharge, however, and that by reason of his property having passed from him he has been rendered incapable of paying any of such debts, a county court judge may commit him for forty days, and so on for successive periods of equal duration, for non-payment of the very debts from which he has been discharged, provided a judgment had been obtained for them in the county court, and this commitment may be in respect of such conduct of the debtor as has already been punished by the sentence of the insolvent court. The jurisdiction of the county court in this respect is exercised under sects. 98 and 99 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, whereby any party who has obtained any unsatisfied judgment or order in any court held by virtue of this act for the payment of any debt, or damages, or costs, may obtain a summons from any county court, &c., requiring him to appear to answer such things as are named in the summons, and he may be examined touching his estate and effects, and the manner and circumstances under which he contracted the debt or incurred the liability, and as to the means and expectations he then had, and as to the property and means he still has, of discharging the same, and as to the disposal he may have made of any property. If he does not attend pursuant to the summons, and does not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending; or if he attends, and refuse to be sworn or disclose any of the things aforesaid, or does not answer as to the same to the satisfaction of the judge; or if it shall appear to the judge that in incurring the debt or liability the party has obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences, or by means of fraud or breach of trust; or has wilfully contracted such debt or liability without having had at the time a reasonable expectation of being able to pay or discharge the same; or has made any gift, delivery, or transfer of any property, or charged, removed, or concealed the same, with intent to defraud his creditors; or that he had at the time of or since the obtaining of the judgment sufficient means and ability to pay the amount, altogether or by instalments, which the court may have ordered, and he refuses or neglects to pay the same as ordered; he may be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding forty days.

Now, contrast with these sections those provisions of the Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, relating to the discharge of the insolvent. By sect. 75, after the examination of the prisoner, upon his swearing to the truth of his schedule, and executing a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment, whereby his future effects may be taken in order to satisfy the debts in the schedule, he may be discharged, at such time as may be directed by the Court, from the debts due at the time of the vesting order to the persons named in the schedule, &c. By sect. 76 (the discretionary clause) the Court has power to adjudge him to be discharged at a period not exceeding six months from the making of the vesting order. By sect. 77, if it appear to the Court that the prisoner has fraudulently destroyed or withheld books, &c. relating to his affairs, or kept false books, or with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors, or of giving an undue preference, discharged or concealed any debt, or made away with &c. any of his property, his discharge may be deferred for three years. By sect. 78, if it appear that he has contracted any debt fraudulently, or by means of breach of trust or of false pretences, or without any reasonable or probable expectation at the time when contracted of paying the same, or caused unnecessary expense by any vexatious or frivolous defence, or that he is indebted for damages recovered in an action for crim. con., or seduction, or breach of promise of marriage, or malicious prosecution, or libel, or slander, or for other malicious injury, or malicious tort, or trespass, his discharge may be deferred for two years. By sect. 88 provision is made for applications to the Insolvent Court in order to take any future effects; and by sect. 90 it is enacted that no person who shall have become entitled to the benefit of the act shall at any time thereafter be imprisoned by reason of the judgment entered up on the warrant of attorney, or for or by reason of any debt or sum of money or costs with respect to which such person shall have become so entitled, or for or by reason of any judgment, decree, or order for payment of the same; but upon every such arrest the Court from which the process issued may release him from custody. By sect. 91, after discharge, no writ of fi. fa. or elegit is to issue on any judgment obtained in respect of any debt from which he has been discharged.

The question, after having excited much controversy in the insolvent and county courts, and having been raised on several occasions in the common-law courts, (Ex parte Pardy, 1 Lownd., M., & P. 16; Still v. Booth, Id. 440), was brought before the Common Pleas in the case of Abley v. Dale, (11 C. B. 378; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 1012; S. C., A.D. 1851). That was an action of trespass for obtaining the committal of the plaintiff by a county court judge under the provisions before referred to, although the plaintiff had been discharged from the debt under the Insolvent Act. The Court held, that there was a discretion to commit, upon the ground that the judgment was an "unsatisfied" one, but said that it was a discretion which should be exercised with extreme caution, and only under very special circumstances. The Court there said—"It certainly does seem to be manifestly unjust to commit, for the non-payment of a particular creditor, a man whose whole property is transferred, by order of a competent court, to an assignee, for the equal benefit of all his creditors. And many may think it absurd that a co-ordinate authority should be given to the insolvent commissioners and the judge of the county court, and that the latter should have power to commit for an act which the commissioner, with the same jurisdiction, may have punished by his remand, or adjudged to be venial by an immediate and absolute discharge—an absurdity which is in no respect diminished by the recent transfer of the jurisdiction of the insolvent commissioners, in certain cases, to the judges of the county courts. But we cannot adopt this rule to the full extent to which it is pressed. If the precise words used are plain and unambiguous, in our judgment we are bound to construe them in their ordinary sense, even though it do lead, in our view of the case, to an absurdity or manifest injustice."

The case of Abley v. Dale has been subsequently recognised by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ex parte Christie, (24 L. J., Q. B., 144; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 211), and also in Ex parte Sumner, (not yet reported). The latter case was subsequently moved in the Court of Common Pleas, when that Court upheld its former decision in Abley v. Dale, and also held that it was not affected by their subsequent decision in Ex parte Dakins, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 378). In the last-named case one of the priests in ordinary of the Chapels Royal was discharged, on the ground of his privilege, from commitment for not appearing to a county court judge's summons; and several important points relating to proceedings upon habeas corpus were also decided in this case. The practice in the insolvent court is to refuse to discharge the prisoner under the circumstances of Abley v. Dale; but we believe they do discharge him if he was committed by the county court while he was in the enjoyment of an order of protection from the insolvent court.

It seems, therefore, that our Courts do not possess the power of remedying this evil; and if so, it is to be hoped that the Legislature will speedily interfere to prevent so unseemly a struggle between two inferior jurisdictions, whereby the liberty of the subject is seriously affected. By the present mode of proceeding it is in the power of county court judges to commit a man for not paying a debt, which he may just have been deprived of the means of paying by the operation of the insolvent laws, and to contravene the well-established rule, that no man shall be punished twice for the same offence.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In Lake v. Butler the Court of Queen's Bench (May 22) decided that the twenty miles mentioned in sect. 128 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, (County Court Act), are to be measured in a straight line as the crow flies, and not by the nearest or other road.

THE BILLS OF EXCHANGE BILL.—The select committee of the House of Commons on the Bills of Exchange Bill and the Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes Bill have just reported the minutes of evidence taken before them. The witnesses include Mr. J. Gilman, the Lord Advocate of Scotland, Mr. Park Nelson, and Mr. W. H. Walton. The committee report that they have carefully considered the two bills committed to them, and have determined to proceed with the Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes Bill, the provisions of which they have carefully considered. The committee were of opinion that it was unadvisable to introduce a new system of procedure if the forms of the English law could be made available for the object in view; and, on hearing the evidence, it appeared to them that summary procedure might easily be introduced into the English law, and that the costs under the Scotch system would not, on the whole, be less than those incurred under English practice. Several divisions took place in the committee. Sir Erskine Perry was voted into the chair by a majority of one over Mr. Walpole; and in the discussion of the details of the bill three divisions occurred, independently of one on the proposition, "That every protest of a notary public of a bill of exchange or promissory note should be received in all proceedings under the act as evidence of the facts therein set forth, in like manner as the protest of foreign bills of exchange is now received as evidence of such facts," which was negatived by a majority of five to three.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—May 22.

LIMITED LIABILITY.

In discussing a motion for suspending the standing orders in favour of the Fibre Company's Bill,

The Earl of Derby said he had to complain of the course taken by the Government upon the whole subject of limited liability. A bill was announced to be in preparation last November with regard to the law of partnership, and almost at the commencement of this session he had put a question as to what was the intention of the Board of Trade on the subject. He was then told that it was considered of great importance to settle this question without delay, and that very soon after Easter a bill should be introduced with that object. They had now, however, approached so near to Whitsuntide that he felt it very doubtful whether a bill would be brought in before their Lordships adjourned for the holidays; and if it were not so introduced, it did not require any great foresight to see that a measure would not be brought forward at all this session.

Lord Overstone said that he saw in bills of this kind the first premonitory symptoms of a great disease which he thought was likely to settle upon this country—he meant the indiscriminate desire for limited liability, without fully considering or understanding the principles upon which that question rested, or what was really conducive to the public interest in this country. The standing order which it was now sought to override was passed by their Lordships in 1824—a period well known to have been characterised by an extraordinary mania for joint-stock speculations, dishonest in their purpose, and dangerous to the community; and the object of this standing order was to protect creditors from speculators who were trading with the capital of other people. He confessed that he heard with satisfaction the assurance of the noble lord who presided over the forms of this House (Lord Redesdale) that he should oppose the suspension of this order, because he believed that, if maintained, it would now present to the people of this country a protection against the same danger as that which led to its establishment in 1824. That danger now assumed the form of asking the Legislature to assent to bills enabling an undertaking to be carried on, not with the capital of those who conducted it, but with the capital of others, and at the same time protecting these speculators from the repayment of that which they borrowed, to the utmost extent of their property. This bill was promoted under the pretence that there was a great demand for an article of essential importance, and that it would be impossible to attempt to supply that demand unless the Legislature enabled capitalists to combine for the purpose of carrying out a certain invention. Now, this was a just ground for legislative interference, provided the persons calling for it came forward in good faith. Great complaints were made that such was the present vicious state of the law of partnership, that capitalists, anxious to enter upon a legitimate speculation, were prevented from doing so. What, however, did they find when they looked at this bill? Why, that the very moment the persons with whom these complaints originated came into contact with the wise and just standing orders of their Lordships' House, which required that speculators, asking to be protected from the full extent of the obligations they might contract, should at all events be called upon to subscribe three-fourths of their capital—the moment they were required to do this, they asked for the suspension of that standing order. Deeply interested as he was in the maintenance of the commercial character of this country, and in the protection of honest creditors against fraudulent debtors, he trusted that a standing order, which he looked upon as involving this high commercial principle, would not be dispensed with by their Lordships.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Practice.

We now proceed to state the practice of the court.

At Law.—The practice under the legal jurisdiction depends partly on the express provisions of the statutes regulating the county court; partly on certain rules made by a committee of county court judges, and sanctioned by a Chief Justice and two other judges of the superior courts; and partly, where the case is not provided for by the statutes or rules, on the general principles of practice prevailing in the superior courts, which are applied by the judges to the proceedings of the court.

Varies with Amount of Claim.—As the practice varies to some extent according to the amount of the claim, it will be convenient to state the course of proceeding—first, where the claim does not exceed 20*l.*; secondly, where it does exceed 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*; and, thirdly, where the claim is unlimited in amount, or the matter in dispute involves a question not within the ordinary jurisdiction of the court.

Plaint.—The proceedings in these cases commence by the entry of a plaint, which the clerk of the court records in a book kept specially for that purpose. The plaintiff, in order to enter his plaint, states viva voce or in writing to the clerk his own name, addition, and residence, and the name, addition, and residence of the defendant, or such other description as will serve to identify him. He then relates the cause of complaint; and if he demand a sum exceeding 40*s.*, he gives one or more copies of the particulars of his claim, according to the number of the defendants, besides one copy which is to be filed by the clerk. The proper fees for issuing and serving the summons must be paid at the time of entering the plaint.

Summons.—A summons, stating in short and popular language the substance of the cause of action, (with particulars where required attached), is issued to the defendant, commanding him to appear at a court, at least ten clear days after the service of the summons, to answer the plaintiff in the matter of dispute.

Service—In Home District—In Foreign District.—This process must be served by the high bailiff of the court or his assistant personally, or in some other way from which it may reasonably be inferred that it has come to the knowledge of the defendant in due time before the holding of the court. If the defendant reside in a foreign district, the process is transmitted by the clerk of the home court to the high bailiff of the foreign court, together with a statement of the proper amount of the fees for service in the foreign district, and which have already been paid at the home court. On production of this document he will, at the end of the quarter, be entitled to receive from the treasurer the amount of those fees. The object of thus withholding the immediate payment of the fees is, that if due diligence have not been used in serving the process, the officer may be deprived of his fees by the treasurer, at the instance of the judge of the home court.

Confession of Claim.—If the defendant think proper, he may, at this stage of the proceedings, enter with the clerk a confession of the claim, and on it the judge may, on the hearing day, pronounce judgment in the same manner as if he had tried the cause; or both parties may agree on the terms on which the cause shall be settled, and on due proof of such agreement before the clerk he may enter judgment in conformity with it, and the judgment may be enforced in the same manner as one pronounced by the judge.

Arbitration.—At this period, or subsequently, the cause may, with the consent of the parties, be referred to arbitration, by order of the judge, and the award afterwards entered as the judgment in the cause. Proper powers of supervising the proceedings of the arbitration are conferred on the judge.

Defence.—If the defendant intend to deny the plaintiff's claim, or to insist on any objection other than one or all of the six special defences hereafter mentioned, it is not necessary for him to give notice of his intention so to do; but he may, at the hearing day, compel the plaintiff to prove his case, may produce evidence in answer, and take such objections in point of law as he thinks available. It is competent for him to pay into court such sum of money as he thinks proper in satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand, together with a proportionate amount of fees of court down to the time of making the payment. If his defence be a tender, he need give no previous notice of it, but may avail himself of it at the hearing, on paying into court, without costs, the sum alleged to have been tendered. If, however, his defence be founded totally or partially on a set-off, infancy, coverture, a statute of limitation, bankruptcy, or insolvency, he must give five clear days' notice of that defence. Subject to this rule, it is competent for him to avail himself, at the hearing, of any defence, whether it traverses, or confesses and avoids, the plaintiff's case. No further pleading or notice is necessary, nor is there any formal joinder of issue.

Jury.—If either party be desirous of having the cause heard before the judge, assisted by a jury, he may claim that privilege as a matter of right where the claim exceeds 5*l.*; and by permission of the judge, where it does not exceed that sum, a jury may be summoned. The jury consists of five persons, who must give a unanimous verdict. Two clear days' notice of requiring a jury must be served on the clerk, and 5*s.* deposited with him to pay the jury. The jurymen are selected by the clerk from a list of qualified persons resident within the district, and that list is supplied to him by the sheriff or other proper officer. With few exceptions, however, the cause is tried by the judge without a jury.

Appearance.—On the appearance day, the defendant either appears or makes default. We will consider the practice—first, where both parties appear; secondly, where neither appears; and, thirdly, where only one party appears.

1. Where both Parties appear.—Judgment.—If both parties appear, the judge, either without or with a jury, as the case may be, proceeds to hear the cause. Considerable powers of amendment are possessed by him, but the plaintiff is confined to the cause of action stated in the summons. If it appear desirable to the judge, he is at liberty to grant time to either party to proceed in the prosecution or defence of the suit, or to adjourn the further hearing of the cause to any subsequent time. It is competent for the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff on sufficient grounds. When the case on both sides is closed, the judge, if unassisted by a jury, decides both on facts and law; if assisted by a jury, he directs them in point of law, and they decide on the facts. Judgment is then given for the plaintiff or defendant, and entered on the minutes of the court. The judge also directs the mode of payment of the sum for which judgment is given, and an order is drawn up in conformity with that direction. The order generally requires the unsuccessful party to pay the amount of the judgment either at once or by instalments into court. The judge has power to direct the payment to be made to the successful party. This, however, is very rarely exercised, and, having regard to the other arrangements of the court, would be inconvenient. A copy of this order is served on the unsuccessful party by post, but proof of its having reached him is not a condition precedent to issuing execution in case of non-payment. The object of the order is, that the party may know specifically what and when he is required to pay. A very large majority of orders are for payment by instalments.

Costs.—The costs abide the event, unless the judge otherwise orders. This, however, does not apply to costs for professional assistance.

New Trial.—Should either party be dissatisfied with the judgment, he may, within a limited time fixed by the practice of the court, move for a new trial. This the judge may grant or refuse at his discretion.

2. Where neither Party appears.—If at the hearing day neither party appears, the cause is struck out of the list.

3. Where only one Party appears.—Plaintiff.—If the plaintiff only appears, proof is given of the service of the process on the defendant; and if no satisfactory reason be assigned for the defendant's absence, the judge may proceed to hear the cause ex parte, and pronounce judgment accordingly. On sufficient cause shewn, he may afterwards grant a new trial.

Defendant.—If the defendant only appears, but does not admit the demand, the judge may award him his costs. If, however, he does admit the demand, and pays the proper fees of court, judgment may be given for the plaintiff in the same manner as if the plaintiff had appeared.

Power to adjourn.—If at any time in the course of the proceedings it appears desirable to adjourn them, the judge is at liberty to do so.

Execution.—The judgment may be enforced by execution against the goods, or, in certain cases hereafter mentioned, by the commitment of the defaulting party for a period of forty or any less number of days. The adoption of one of these proceedings does not prevent the creditor from having recourse to the other. The judgment, however, cannot be made available against land.

Goods.—Under the warrant of execution the high bailiff is empowered to seize all the goods and chattels of the judgment debtor, except his wearing apparel and bedding, tools, and implements of trade, to the value in the whole of 5*l.* The goods cannot be sold without appraisement, and until after the lapse of five days from the time of seizure, unless of a perishable nature, or the defendant make a written request for an earlier sale. The high bailiff may also seize money, bank notes, cheques, or securities for money belonging to the debtor, and may hold any such securities in order to satisfy the judgment; and the creditor may sue in the name of the debtor on such securities. The proceeds realised under the execution are paid by the high bailiff into court, after deducting certain charges for appraisement and possession.

Foreign District.—If the defendant's goods are in a foreign district, the warrant is transmitted to the clerk of the foreign court, together with a statement of the bailiff's fees on the execution. This warrant is then sealed with the seal of the foreign court, and issued to the high bailiff of that district. The proceeds realised there by the execution are paid into the foreign court. The clerk then transmits a particular of the execution to the clerk of the home court, debiting himself with the sum received under the execution. On application to the clerk of the home court, he pays to the execution creditor the sum with which the clerk of the foreign court has debited himself. This payment is afterwards allowed him in his accounts by the treasurer at the audit. By this means the inconvenience and risk of transmitting money from one part of the kingdom to the other is avoided.

Landlord's Claim to Rent.—If, when the bailiff levies, he receives notice from the landlord of rent in arrear, he must give preference to that claim to a certain amount, limited by the period of letting, but in no case exceeding one year's rent, and may then levy on the residue for the judgment debt.

Interpleader.—Should any claim be made by third parties on the goods seized, the bailiff can compel the execution creditor and the claimant to interplead, and the court may dispose of the matter in dispute.

In the preferable part of the Strand, near to Somerset-house.—Capital Freehold Estate, let on lease to Mr. Eve at 1531. per annum.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12 at 12, a very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, situate on the south side of the Strand, in the parish of St. Clement Danes, consisting of a residence and shop, No. 165 A, let on lease for 21 years from 1834 to Mr. Eve, tea-dealer and grocer, a highly respectable tenant, subject to a yearly rent of 1501., and 3d. in lieu of land tax.

May be viewed by permission of the tenant, and particulars had, ten days prior to the sale, of Frederick Farrar, Esq., solicitor, 19, Goddismistreet, Doctors' Commons; at Garraway's; and of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Very valuable Freehold Estates, Strand and Temple-bar, producing about 6301. per annum, part of the estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12, at 12 o'clock, in lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, viz.:—The New Barn public-house and wine-vaults, in St. Clement's churchyard, in the Strand, let on lease, expiring 1856, at 1501. per annum. Nos. 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 15, and 16, Great Shire-lane, and Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Brick-court, on leases and agreements, at rents amounting to 1701. per annum. No. 37, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Mr. W. Stevens, as a printing office, at 651. per annum; and 39, Bell-yard, Temple-bar, let on lease to Messrs. Richard Stevens and G. S. Norton, at 651. per annum. The dwelling-house and printing-offices, 38, Bell-yard, and 10, Great Shire-lane, in the occupation of Messrs. Roworth and Sons, at 1711. per annum, and ground in the rear of 41 and 42, Bell-yard. The properties may be viewed by permission of the respective tenants.

Particulars are now ready, and may be had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 4, Chancery-lane; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Hammer-smith.—Very valuable Copyhold Estates, producing about 1601. per annum, part of the Estates of the late William Payne, Esq.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are directed by the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Tuesday, June 12, at 12, in lots, a very valuable COPYHOLD ESTATE, situate in the High-street, Hammer-smith, near the Broadway, comprising three capital Houses and Shops, with large gardens, in the occupations of Mr. Lacey, grocer, and Mr. Barker, upholsterer, at rents amounting to 1331. 10s. per annum; also a very valuable piece of Copyhold Ground, now used as a market garden, in the rear of the foregoing, and having frontage to, and entrance from, Great Church-lane, adapted for building purposes. The property is copyhold of the Manor of Fulham, subject to a quit-rent of 2s. per annum, and the land-tax is redeemed.

May be viewed by permission of the tenants, and particulars had of Edward Jennings, Esq., solicitor, 9, Chancery-lane; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Essex.—In the parish of Magdalen Laver, easy distances from Harlow, and the capital Market Towns of Epping, Bishop Stortford, and Ongar, very desirable and compact Freehold Estate, called Spencer's Farm, with upwards of 186 acres of productive Land.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, a very desirable FREEHOLD ESTATE, called Spencer's Farm, land-tax redeemed, partly adjoining the high road from Epping to Harlow, six miles from the former, five from the latter, and six and eight miles respectively from the capital market towns of Ongar and Bishop Stortford; comprising a capital farm-house, garden, warm yards, all suitable and well-arranged agricultural buildings, and 126A. 1s. 30p. of productive arable and pasture land, lying within a ring fence. The lands are in a high state of cultivation, the pastures are bounded by a stream, and lie well for irrigation. There are several ponds on the property, and it has been in the occupation for upwards of twenty years of the late Mr. John Larter, a highly-respectable and intelligent farmer, and now of his executors.

May be viewed, and particulars, with plans, had at the farm; at the George and Green Man Inns, Harlow; Cock, Epping; Crown, Ongar; White Lion, Sawbridgeworth; the George, Bishop Stortford; of Mr. R. P. Browne, land agent, Great Hallingbury; and in London, of Messrs. Denton, Kinderley, Donville, and Lawrence, 6, New-square, Lincoln's-inn; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Albury, Herts, five miles from the Railway at Bishop Stortford.—Freehold and small part Copyhold Farm, called "Piggott's," the Fox Public-house, and sundry Inclosures of detached Lands; the whole containing 196 acres.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed by the Trustees to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, in seven lots, the following very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, situate about five miles from the Railway Station at Bishop Stortford, ten from Ware, twelve from Hertford, and adjoining the Kennel of the Puckeridge Hounds, in the parishes of Albury, Little Hadham, and Braughing, viz.:—Piggott's Farm, comprising a comfortable farm-house, (suitable for a hunting box), good garden, orchard, warm farm-yard, with extensive stabling, wheat, oat, and barley barns, cow-houses, cattle and cart sheds, and 183 acres of productive arable and pasture land, lying very compact, chiefly under-drained, and partly tithe-free. The Fox licensed public-house, adjoining the high road, with offices and gardens. A plot of detached Arable Land, situate in Molly Chips Common. Two Inclosures in Parsonage Common, near Parsonage Farm, and abutting on Albury Park. A plot of Arable Land, situate in Ham's Common; and a very valuable inclosure of Land, abutting on the road from Little Hadham to Standon, and adjoining the lands of the Marquis of Salisbury and Mr. Chapman, known as Priory Leys. The whole estate comprises about 196 acres, and is in the occupation of Mr. Peter Sullens, a most respectable tenant, on lease, which will expire on the 29th September, 1857, at the very low rent of 1851. per annum.

No. 22, VOL. I., NEW SERIES.

May be viewed, and particulars, with plans, had of the tenant; at the Fox, on the estate; George, Bishop Stortford; Saracen's Head, Ware; Salisbury Arms, Hertford; and in London, of D. S. Bocket, Esq., solicitor, 60, Lincoln's-inn-fields; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, 6, Lancaster-place, Strand.

Islington, close to the Parish Church, in the High-street, and extending behind the Upper-terrace.—Highly valuable and important Building Land, comprising about Three Acres, and Blacksmith's Shop, &c.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, in lots, a highly valuable and important PROPERTY, comprising about three acres of building land, and the only uncovered land so close to the metropolis, situate abutting on the High-street, Islington, to which there is a frontage of 300 feet, extending in the rear behind Upper-terrace, and close to the parish church. The property is copyhold of the manor of Canonbury, subject to a trifling quit-rent, and a fine on death or alienation of 6s. 8d. per house, or 6s. 8d. per acre for land; so is equal in value to freehold, and the cost of enfranchisement would be nearly nominal. There is a lease upon the property, which has six years and three quarters to run; consequently the reversion after the expiration of that lease is intended only to be sold.

The plans published with the particulars will shew the great capabilities of the property for building purposes, and both may be had, 21 days prior to the sale, at the Angel, Islington; of Messrs. Whiteside and Smith, solicitors, Lincoln's-inn-fields; of Mr. George Smith, architect, Mercer's-hall; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

17, Montague-street, Portman-square.—A capital Leasehold Family Residence, overlooking the Gardens of Montague-house, with Coach-house and Stabling at the rear, with possession; also Ten Paid-up Shares in the Polytechnic Institution.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE have received instructions to SELL, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 13, at 12, a capital FAMILY RESIDENCE, in the fashionable locality of Portman-square, being No. 17, Montague-street, and overlooking the pleasure grounds of Montague-house. The residence is well built and finished, has extensive frontage, and inclosed portico entrance, and contains, on the upper floor, five good bed-rooms; on the second floor, three principal bed-chambers; on the first floor, a noble drawing-room, communicating with a smaller drawing-room; on the ground floor, capital dining-room, library, waiting-room, entrance and inner halls, stone staircase, and a second staircase, lobby, water-closet, and bath-room; basement, kitchen, pantry, housekeeper's room, wine-cellar, beer-cellar, coal-vaults, scullery, and wash-house, water-closets, back area leading to a three-stall stable and coach-house, with rooms over, in Montague-mews. A well of fine spring water. Possession will be given on completion of the purchase. The annual value being 2201. per annum. Held on lease for the unexpired term of about 45 years, at a ground-rent of 251. per annum. Also ten paid-up shares in the Polytechnic Institution, conferring a right of free admission.

May be viewed by cards only, to be had of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, of whom particulars may also be had; of Messrs. Whiteside and Smith, solicitors, 63, Lincoln's-inn-fields; of Geo. Smith, Esq., Mercer's-hall; and at Garraway's.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 9, 1855.

THE Lord Chancellor proposes that three assizes and eight quarter sessions should be held in each year. The object is to have more speedy justice, and there is great need of it. Lord Brougham stated on a recent occasion, that the returns of 1853 shewed 28,000 commitments in that year. Of these, 6200 had been acquitted, and the average imprisonment of these (presumably) innocent persons amounted to six weeks. This is a serious grievance, which should be remedied as far as possible. Under the present system, a person may be committed for trial just after the assizes in July, and if the offence with which he is charged happens to be one not triable at the sessions, he may be detained in prison awaiting his trial until the following March, a period of eight months; he may then be acquitted; so that he ought not to have been subjected to any detention whatever, and he has no remedy for the loss of his liberty, and the concomitant evils attending its loss. At the same time, it must be admitted that this is an argument capable of being pushed to an extreme point, because, as an innocent man ought to be discharged at once, it affords a reason for proceeding to final investigation and decision as soon as an alleged offender is arrested. In the administration of justice, as in other matters involving large and varied interests, the object to be kept in view is the fair and equitable adjustment of public convenience and of private rights.

If more frequent assizes and sessions are held at reasonable intervals, it will be an advantage to the public, who will thus be enabled to enforce their rights more speedily; it will be an advantage also to prisoners, who will thereby be detained for a less period in prison. To that branch of the public whence our juries are supplied there will undoubtedly be some additional inconvenience, but it will not be sufficient to preponderate over the advantages of speedy justice; nor must it be forgotten that they will be occupied in the discharge of their important duties for a shorter duration of time on each occasion, by reason of their being summoned more frequently. The labours of our learned judges will be increased, but the number of cases which they now have to try will not, perhaps, be materially increased on the whole year, though they will be distributed over more frequent periods. If necessary, however, the number of our judges could be increased to meet the additional labour. The Bar will suffer by the alteration in one view, as they will be compelled to leave their London business eleven times during the year, and to travel the same distance as at present, incurring the somewhat onerous expenses of lodgings, dinners, &c., for a less amount of work than is afforded them on their present "itineraries;" but the interests of the Bar must not stand in the way of great public benefits, nor do they desire that they should. In one view, the change may not be without its advantage to the legal Profession, as, by facilitating the remedies of suitors, they will resort more frequently to the tribunals where their remedies may be enforced.

The proposition of the Lord Chancellor tends to remove the existing evils to some extent, but we venture to doubt whether they might not be more completely and effectually removed by a slight modification of his Lordship's plan. If only three assizes are held annually, the prisoners whose cases cannot be (and, indeed, ought not to be) tried at sessions would still be liable to be imprisoned for four months before trial, while the same interval would elapse before civil causes could be tried. By holding eight sessions annually, jurors would be summoned to attend them twice as often as they are at present. These objections, we think, might to a great extent be obviated by holding the assizes four times in the year, and the quarter sessions, as at present, four times in the year, but at equidistant periods between the assizes. By this arrangement there would be criminal courts sitting throughout the country every six weeks; prisoners charged with offences not within the jurisdiction of sessions would be tried at intervals of three months, and civil causes would also be tried at the same periods. It would be necessary so to re-adjust the Terms as to make them subservient to these alterations.

If the Lord Chancellor's proposal for eight sessions is adopted, of what use will be the Criminal Justice Bill, now before a committee of the House of Commons, the object of which is to invest two justices in petty sessions with extraordinary powers, on account of the necessity for trying prisoners more frequently? If the Lord Chancellor's plan is carried out, the Criminal Justice Bill will be unnecessary, (unless, indeed, for the saving of some expense). If the Criminal Justice Bill pass into a law, the increased number of sessions will be useless, as there will be so few prisoners to be tried at them.

Whatever arrangement may be ultimately made, we shall be rejoiced to see justice rendered more speedy in its administration, as it has already been rendered more simple and less costly.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

TRINITY TERM.—18 VICTORIA.—June 1, 1855.

This Court will hold sittings on Thursday, the 14th day of June instant, and on every succeeding day, (Sundays excepted), until and including Saturday, the 23rd day of June instant, and will at such sittings proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the New Trial and Special Papers; and will also hold a sitting on Thursday, the 5th day of July next, and will at such sitting proceed in giving judgment in all matters then standing for judgment.

HARRY G. ROGERS, Sec.

Wiltshire.—Very valuable Church Preferment, amounting to nearly 1500*l.* per annum; the Incumbent aged 70 years.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, CLARK, and LYE are instructed to SELL, at Garraway's, on Wednesday, June 15, at 12, (unless an acceptable offer is previously made by private contract), the very valuable NEXT PRESENTATION (subject to the life of the incumbent, aged 70 years) to the RECTORY of Pewsey, situate about seven miles from Marlborough, twelve from Devizes, thirty from Bath, and fourteen from the Great Western Station at Hungerford; consisting of an excellent residence, with offices, garden, and 124*a.* 2*a.* 1*r.* of glebe land. Also the commuted Rent-charge in lieu of the great and small tithes of the parish, containing about 4000 acres. The gross annual value is 184*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*

Descriptive particulars may be had, 21 days previous to the sale, of Messrs. Blake, Tylee, and Tylee, 14, Essex-street, Strand; at the Bear Inn, Devizes; Ailesbury Arms, Marlborough; White Hart, Bath; Angel, Oxford; Bull, Cambridge; at Garraway's; and at the offices of Messrs. Farebrother, Clark, and Lye, Lancaster-place, Strand.

1702*l.* per Annum, in first-class Freehold Ground-rents, secured by truly valuable Property, at Baywater, producing Rack-rents amounting to upwards of 11,250*l.* per annum, to which there is a most valuable Reversion, important to Trustees, Capitalists, and others.

CHINNOCK and GALSORTHY are favoured with instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at the Mart, on TUESDAY, June 19, at 1 precisely, in numerous lots, arranged to suit both large and small capitalists, FREEHOLD GROUND-RENTS, amounting to 1702*l.* per annum, secured by an important property, to the rack-rents of which there is the very valuable reversion, amounting to about 11,250*l.* per annum. The estates are situate close to the north side of Hyde-park and Kensington-gardens, and comprise 32 first-class detached residences, 42 semi-detached villas, 69 terrace houses, some with capital shops, well placed for business purposes, two valuable taverns and public-houses, and several ranges of stabling and other property, situate in Pembridge-villas, Chestow-villas, Chestow-villas West, Pembridge-place, Chestow-place, Westbourne-grove West, Pembridge-crescent, Denbigh-road, Pelham and Denbigh mews, and Portobello-lane, presenting an unexceptionable opportunity for investment in the highest class security that can possibly be obtained.

Particulars, with plans, may be obtained of Thos. William Budd, Esq., 33, Bedford-row; at the Auction Mart, City; at the Royal Oak, Westbourne-grove; and of Messrs. Chinnock and Galsworthy, auctioneers and surveyors, 28, Regent-street, Waterloo-place.

SMITH'S ACTION AT LAW.

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW of the PROCEEDINGS of an ACTION at LAW. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., late of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "Leading Cases," "A Compendium of Mercantile Law," &c. Fifth Edition, adapted to the Practice under the Common-law Procedure Acts, 1833 and 1854. By EDWARD WISE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"To the lawyer this book will be a useful remembrancer; to the lay student it is a necessity. Whatever Mr. Wise has contributed, and necessarily it is a considerable portion of the whole volume, he has done so well that it is scarcely to be distinguished from the original. He has caught the spirit of his master, and carried out his design very much as Smith, had he been living, would have desired."—Law Times, Nov. 18, 1854.

London: Stevens & Norton; H. Sweet; and W. Maxwell.

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK; this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorise any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. B. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assureds do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
188 9 3	135 7 3

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 16, 1855.

THE stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, appears to have effected a material alteration in the doctrines of law which govern that extensive class of contracts known as "gaming contracts." After repealing former statutes which had declared such contracts to be illegal, it is enacted, by sect. 18, that "all contracts and agreements, whether by parol or in writing, by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void, and that no suit shall be brought or maintained in any court of law or equity for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing alleged to be won upon any wager." There is a proviso appended to this section, whereby "any subscription or contribution, or agreement to subscribe or contribute, for or towards any plate, prize, or sum of money to be awarded to the winner of any lawful game," is excepted from the operation of the act. One question arises with regard to the enacting part of the section, as to the distinction between illegal and merely void considerations. If money is paid or goods handed over on account of a wager not within the proviso, can it be recovered back? If it be a voluntary payment, or voluntary delivery, not made under any mistake of facts, it would seem that it could not be recovered, according to a well-established rule, which is independent of the legality or illegality of the consideration. But supposing elements to exist in the case which take it out of the operation of this rule, can the parties still be said to be in pari delicto, so as to be precluded from having recourse to the pure fountain of justice? On the one hand, it may be urged that it was not the intention of the Legislature to legalise such transactions, and that by rendering them void it has in effect declared them to be against the policy of the law, so as to make them in one sense illegal. On the other hand, it may be said that a distinction between void and illegal contracts was in the contemplation of the Legislature, and that this distinction has been recognised in a very recent case, (not yet reported), in which it was decided that a bill given between the original parties for a gaming consideration, not within the proviso of the statute, was held not to be so tainted by illegality as to throw upon an indorsee the onus of proving that he gave consideration for it. We may here also refer to the case of Knight v. Chambers, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 525). That was an action for money paid; the defendant pleaded that the money was paid in respect of certain differences in the price of shares in a public company, to be paid by the defendant under wagering contracts, contrary to the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, which the plaintiff had made for the defendant with third persons. The Court of Common Pleas held, that as the plea did not negative the plaintiff's request, and the act made such contracts only void, and not illegal, the plea did not disclose any defence. The case was likened by the Chief Justice to a payment by the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, of purchase money for goods above the value of 10*l.*, the contract of purchase being void under the Statute of Frauds; and Maule, J., said, "Looking at the whole record, it appears that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, paid for him certain money which the defendant was not legally bound to pay, the contract he had entered into being merely void." To the same effect is Knight v. Fitch, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 526), which was an action for work done, commission, and money paid. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was a stock and share broker, and as such made certain contracts for the defendant by way of wagering, contrary to the statute, under the semblance of pretended sales respecting the future market price of certain public and other stock, &c., whereby the defendant was to receive or pay the differences between the price of the said stock on the days on which the contracts were made, and the price on certain future days, according as the price had become higher or lower, and that the causes of action arose in respect thereof. The Court of Common Pleas held that this was no defence under the statute in question, and that it disclosed no defence under the Stock-jobbing Act, 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, as it was not alleged that each contract related to public stock. Some valuable observations on the nature of the defence attempted to be set up in these cases will be found in Mr. Hodges' work on the Law of Railways, Railway Companies, and Railway Investments, (2nd ed., pp. 126—134).

We shall return to this subject in our next number, and must for the present content ourselves with calling attention to the case of Parsons v. Alexander, (Q. B., June 2 and 4). It was there held to be a good defence to an account stated, that it was stated in respect of money won at billiards, the money not being placed in the hands of a stakeholder, and therefore not falling within the proviso already referred to. The Court expressed their opinion to be, that the enactment applied to gaming, or bets upon a lawful game, and extended also to the stakes of the parties engaged in the game, the proviso applying only to cases where there was a subscription, collection, or contribution to any prize, placed in the hands of a third party to be awarded to the winner.

THE LIMITED LIABILITY BILLS.*

We have met with a great many persons who agree in thinking that the rules of the English law applicable to the constitution of the relation of debtor and creditor by agency or procuration, from which arises the liability of dormant or non-ostensible partners, are logical deductions from the first principles of the law of contracts, and are convenient and beneficial in operation, and ought not to be altered; but among the many advocates for some alteration of those rules we have not met with one who seemed to understand the reason of them, or two who agreed as to the mode in which they should be altered. Certainly, while the existing law numbers its thousands of intelligent and practical supporters, (including, we believe, almost every mercantile name of importance in the city of London), no one of the legion of published plans for amendment has been adopted by any noticeable school or body of partisans. The Government bills have merely added to the number of schemes, and, from the necessity of the case, are equally unsatisfactory to the advocates of change and to those who would keep the law unaltered in that direction.

The Partnership Bill would enable any person to carry on any trade, other than that of banking, in the name of any other person, without being liable for the debts of the trade, subject to the following conditions:—

First, that the names, places of business, and descriptions of the irresponsible trader and his responsible agent respectively, and the amount of the capital belonging to the former, and the nature of his interest in the profits, be registered at the Office for the Registration of Joint-stock Companies.

Secondly, that every variation in the irresponsible partner's interest in the capital and profits respectively be from time to time registered; the penalty for omitting for an hour to register the repayment of 10s. of the advanced capital, or the advance of another 10s., being partnership and full liability.

Thirdly, that on the estate of the responsible trader or agent being administered in bankruptcy or insolvency, (the only reference to insolvency in the bill is the old and now insufficient expression, "taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act"), or on his death, or, in the case of a company, under the Winding-up Act, the irresponsible trader shall not make any claim in competition with the other creditors, and shall be liable to them ("the other creditors of the borrower" is the phrase, thus including his private as well as his trade creditors) to the extent of any monies received by him out of the assets on account of his share in the capital, or of profits or interest; and all payments on account of principal are to be deemed to have been made within the year, unless registered as having been made at an earlier date. The immediate object of this provision is to encourage the registering of withdrawals of capital, under the notion that in some way the public has an interest in knowing at the earliest moment every diminution of that part of the capital which belongs to the irresponsible partners. But how it can be important to the public to know both every addition to and every deduction from the irresponsible constituency is not apparent, nor is the inquiry worth pursuing until the value of such registration for any purpose has been proved. Probably the intention was to make the registration a security to the public that the advertised amount of capital had been actually advanced, and not withdrawn; for the registrar is to require the production of the instrument for securing or manifesting the advance, or such other evidence of the advance as he shall deem sufficient. But the instrument will not prove that the advance has been actually made, and no penalty or liability is imposed in case of a misstatement.

By the other bill it is proposed to entitle the members of a joint-stock company, formed under the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, (other than insurance companies, an amusing exception, seeing that such companies can and generally do limit their liability by the special terms of their policies), to exemption from liability for the company's debts beyond the amount of their respective unpaid subscriptions, on the following conditions:—

The nominal capital must not be less than 20,000*l.*, in shares of not less than 25*l.*

The company's name must offend every English ear by concluding with the word "limited," as thus, "The Universal Gold Washing Company, limited."

The deed of settlement must express the limitation of liability, and be executed by shareholders to the extent of three-fourths of the nominal capital, and they must pay 20*l.* per cent. on their shares before the company can be completely registered with limited liability.

Additions to the capital can only be made on the same conditions as are required for the original establishment of the company.

The company must be wound up as soon as the annual account or the auditors' report shows that three-fourths of the subscribed capital has been lost or has become unavailable from any cause. There is no explanation of the word "unavailable."

It is unnecessary to criticise the details of these bills. We have stated enough to shew that they have been prepared by persons who do not understand the subject on which they are presuming to legislate. The Companies Bill is limited to registered companies with large capitals, held in large shares—a limitation which will not be satisfactory to the majority of those who call for a change in the law; but this limitation is rendered nugatory by the provisions of the other bill, which, as we have seen, provides for the carrying on of any business, other than that of banking, (but not excluding insurance, which, with banking, is excluded from the Companies Bill), with a capital subscribed by persons who share the profits, but are not partners or liable for the debts, and whose association in any number is therefore not subject to the provisions of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act. Under that bill, therefore, all the small companies and undertakings excluded from the Companies Bill might be established and carried on with limited liability, and without any of the checks (the salutary checks, as we presume to characterise them) of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Person.]—An order for commitment cannot be obtained as a matter of course, but only on a special application to the judge in court. This order may be obtained at the hearing immediately after judgment, when the debt appears to have been fraudulently contracted, or the defendant has been guilty of some other misconduct specified in the act of Parliament, and dwells or carries on business in the district of the court; or it may be obtained on the hearing of a summons taken out in the district where the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of applying, without regard to the district in which the judgment was obtained. The summons requires the debtor to appear and be examined, and intimates that if he do not appear the court may proceed in his absence. In addition to the other grounds of committal already referred to is that of non-payment of the demand, if the defaulter be possessed of means to pay. If the defendant undergo the imprisonment awarded under the order for commitment, the debt is not satisfied or extinguished, and he may, at the discretion of the judge, in certain cases of subsequent default, be committed for any number of successive periods, not exceeding forty days each, until payment is enforced. Moreover, it seems the debtor is not protected from this proceeding by a discharge under an insolvent act, and no protection, order, or certificate granted by any court of bankruptcy, or for the relief of insolvent debtors, is available to discharge a party from such a commitment.

Transmission of Process.]—When the defendant removes from the home district, the process is transmitted, like other process, to the high bailiff of the foreign district.

Prison.]—The warrant of commitment orders the bailiff to convey the body of the debtor to prison. This prison is the common gaol of the county or place in which the defendant is resident, and which is used for the confinement of debtors in execution under the process of the superior courts, or in some other place of confinement in the county allowed for that purpose by order of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has, however, in very few instances exercised his power of allowing places of confinement other than the common gaol of the county to be used for the purposes of the county court.

Staying Execution.]—It is competent for the judge, on sufficient cause shewn, to stay a judgment or an execution, but neither can be stayed or reversed by writ of error, or superedeas thereon.

II.—Next as to the practice where the claim exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*

Appeal.—Notice.]—In these cases the practice and proceedings are the same in all respects, except that if either party be dissatisfied with the determination or direction of the court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of evidence, he may appeal to one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, on depositing the amount of the judgment, or on giving security, to be approved by the clerk of the court, for the amount of the judgment and costs, or costs only, as the case may be. Of this appeal notice must be given to the opposite party within ten days after the determination or direction of which complaint is made. A case containing a statement of the facts is then prepared by the parties, which must be signed by the judge. If the parties cannot agree, the judge settles the case. It is then transmitted by the appellant to the proper officer of the court selected as the court of appeal. The appeal is set down for argument, and is disposed of as part of the ordinary business of the court. The court of appeal may either order a new trial on such terms as it thinks fit, or may order judgment to be entered for either party, and may make such order with respect to the costs of the appeal as it thinks proper. Those orders are final. The court of appeal sometimes remits the case to the judge for the purpose of amendment.

III.—The jurisdiction in cases where the claim exceeds the sum of 50*l.*, or where questions not within the ordinary jurisdiction of the court are submitted to its decision, is only given by consent.

Consent.]—The mode of giving this consent is by the parties or their attorneys signing a memorandum of agreement, in which they state that they know the cause of action to be above the sum of 50*l.*, or that the title will come in question in the action. This memorandum is filed with the clerk of the court at the time of entering the plaint. The proceedings in the action are then the same, and conducted in the same manner as in the two classes of claims already mentioned.

Verdict.]—It is to be observed that all local actions brought by consent within the jurisdiction of the county court must be brought and tried in that district in which the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or some part of them, in respect of which the action is brought, are situated.

Replevin.

Plaint.—Particulars.—Summons.]—In this peculiar form of action, in cases of distress for rent in arrear or damage feasant, a new mode of proceeding has been introduced, compounded partly of the mode formerly existing and partly of certain conditions introduced by the statute. Where the distress has been made either for rent or for damage, the practice still continues of applying to the sheriff or the replevin clerk to replevy; and a bond with sureties in the usual form is still required, except that part of the condition is to prosecute the suit in the statutory county court. The replevisor must then, in fulfilment of the condition of his bond, enter his plaint in the county court in the district wherein the distress was taken. On entering the plaint the plaintiff must give to the clerk a sufficient number of copies of particulars of the goods and chattels which he alleges to have been wrongfully taken. A summons is then issued in the usual way, and the case proceeds to hearing like any other claim. A difference resulting from the nature of the proceeding of course exists in the judgment. If the distress was for rent in arrear, the judgment, whether for the plaintiff or the defendant, is the same as may be obtained in the superior courts of common law. If the distress was for damage feasant, the judgment for the plaintiff is the same as in the superior courts; but if the defendant succeeds, the judge or jury may assess the amount of damages done by the plaintiff's trespass, and the judgment may be in the alternative for a return, or for the damage so assessed. The decision of the court, whatever the amount of property distrained, or whatever questions of law arise in the course of the inquiry, is final.

This is the course of proceeding in actions of replevin, where the case is left to the decision of the county court.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Fitzroy, Mr. Bouvier, and Viscount Palmerston)

To amend the Law of Partnership.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Partnership Amendment Act, 1855."

2. No person who may hereafter, in manner authorised by this act, lend any money to any other person not being a banker, or to any partnership or company not being a banking partnership or company, shall be deemed to be a partner with the person or a member of the partnership or company borrowing such money, by reason of his receiving or being entitled to receive a portion of the profits made by such person, partnership, or company so borrowing, or a sum varying according to the amount of such profits, either in lieu of, or in addition to, any interest for or on account of such loan, or by reason of any agreement to bear any portion of the loss which may be sustained by such person or partnership in any trade or business carried on by him or them.

3. A loan shall be deemed to have been made in manner authorised by this act whenever the following particulars in respect thereof have been registered at the office for the registration of joint-stock companies in London in cases where the borrower is resident in England, and at the office for the registration of joint-stock companies in Dublin in cases where the borrower is resident in Ireland; that is to say,

The name, place of business, and description of the lender:

The name, place of business, and description of the borrower:

The amount of the loan:

The proportion of profits, interest, or sum, varying according to the amount of profits, payable in respect of such loan:

And if any material omission or misstatement is made in any of the above particulars, such loan shall be deemed not to have been made in manner authorised by this act.

4. Whenever any variation is made in the amount of any registered loan, or in the amount of the profits, interest, or sum payable in respect thereof, or whenever such loan is renewed, such variation or renewal shall be deemed to constitute a new loan, and to require registration accordingly.

5. The following rules shall be observed with respect to the registration of loans:—

- (1). The registrar shall provide proper books for the purpose of registering such loans as aforesaid, but all entries therein shall be in such form as may from time to time be directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, hereinafter called the Board of Trade:
- (2). Before registering any loan, the registrar shall require the production of the instrument for securing or manifesting the same, and the profits, interest, or sum payable in respect thereof, or such other evidence of such loan as he shall deem sufficient, and shall stamp the instruments so produced with the seal of his office:
- (3). In case of a loan, or any part thereof, being repaid, the registrar shall, on application being made to him, and proof shewn of the fact, make an entry to that effect in the register book, specifying in such entry the date of the application; and the date so entered shall for the purposes of this act be considered the date of the repayment of the loan, or part of loan, as the case may be:
- (4). The registrar, if so required by the Board of Trade, shall, in the case of loans registered in England, advertise in the London Gazette, and in the case of loans registered in Ireland, advertise in the Dublin Gazette, the repayment of a loan, or any part thereof, in such manner as the Board of Trade may direct:
- (5). There shall be charged in respect of the entry of any registered loan, or of any such variation or discharge as aforesaid, a fee of 5s. in cases where the loan does not exceed 100l., and a fee of 10s. in cases where the loan exceeds 100l., or such other fees as may from time to time be directed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury:
- (6). Every person may, on payment of a fee of 1s., have access to the registry books of loans, for the purpose of inspection, at any reasonable time during the hours of official attendance of the registrar, and may require a copy or extract of any entry therein, to be certified by the registrar; and there shall be paid for such certified copy or extract a fee of 1s., and a further fee, not exceeding 6d., for each folio of such copy or extract beyond the first folio; and in all courts of law and equity, and elsewhere, every such copy of extract so certified shall be received in evidence without proof of the signature thereto, or of the seal or office affixed thereto.

6. In the event of a borrower being adjudged a bankrupt, taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, or dying in insolvent circumstances, or if such borrower is a company in the event of its being declared bankrupt, or of an order being made for winding it up, a lender of a registered loan shall not be entitled to receive any portion of his principal, or of the profits, interest, or sum payable in respect of such loan, until the claims of the other creditors of the borrower have been satisfied; and in addition thereto he shall be liable to make good to the other creditors of the borrower any deficiency of assets to the extent of all sums of money or other benefit received by him during the year immediately preceding any such event as aforesaid, on account of the principal of such loan, or on account of the profits, interest, or sum payable in respect of the same, but the principal of such loan which shall have been repaid shall be deemed to have been repaid within such year, unless the date of repayment shall appear by the register to have been prior to the period of such year.

7. No person employed by any person, partnership, or company, as agent, factor, servant, or in other like capacity, shall be deemed to be a partner by reason of his receiving, in lieu of or in addition to wages for his service, a portion of the profits made by such person or partnership, or a sum varying according to the amount of such profits.

8. This act shall not apply to Scotland.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL

(Prepared and brought in by Mr. Fitzroy, Mr. Bouverie, and Viscount Palmerston)

For limiting the Liability of Members of certain Joint-stock Companies.

Sect. 1. Any joint-stock company to be formed under the act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, (other than an insurance company), having a capital stock of the nominal amount of not less than 20,000l., divided into shares of a nominal value not less than 25l. each, may obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability upon complying with the conditions following, in addition to doing all other matters and things now required in order to obtain a certificate of complete registration; that is to say,

- (1). The promoters shall state on their returns to the office for provisional registration that such company is proposed to be formed with limited liability:
- (2). The word "limited" shall be the last word of the name of the company:
- (3). The deed of settlement shall contain a statement to the effect that the company is formed with limited liability:
- (4). The deed of settlement shall be executed by shareholders holding shares to the amount, in the aggregate, of at least three-fourths of the nominal capital of the company, and there shall have been paid up by each of such shareholders, on account of his shares, not less than 20l. per centum:
- (5). The payment of the above per-centage shall be acknowledged in or indorsed on the deed of settlement, and the fact of the same having been bona fide so paid shall be verified by a declaration of the promoters, or any two of them, made in pursuance of the act made in the 6 Will. 4, c. 62:

And upon such conditions being complied with, and such other matters and things done, the registrar of joint-stock companies shall grant a certificate of complete registration with limited liability to such company.

2. Any joint-stock company, except as aforesaid, completely registered under the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, and having a capital stock of the nominal amount of not less than 20,000l., may obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, in manner and subject to the conditions following; that is to say,

The directors of such company may, with the consent of at least three-fourths in number and value of its shareholders present at any general meeting summoned for that purpose, make such alteration in the name, nominal value of shares, and deed of settlement of the company as may be necessary for enabling it to comply with the conditions hereinbefore mentioned with respect to joint-stock companies seeking to obtain certificates of complete registration with limited liability; and upon compliance with such conditions, the registrar shall grant to such company, by its new name, a certificate of complete registration with limited liability; and thereupon all privileges and obligations hereby attached to companies with limited liability, their shareholders, directors, and officers, shall attach to the company named in such certificate, its shareholders, directors, and officers.

3. Every company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability shall paint or affix, and shall keep painted or affixed, its name on the outside of every office or place in which the business of the company is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible, and shall have its name engraven in legible characters on its seal, and shall have its name mentioned in legible characters in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of such company.

4. If such company do not paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name in the manner aforesaid, each of the directors thereof shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for not so painting or affixing its name, and for every day during which such name is not so kept painted or affixed; and if any director or other officer of the company, or any person on its behalf, use any seal purporting to be a seal of the company whereon its name is not so engraven as aforesaid, or issue or authorise the issue of any notice, advertisement, or other official publication relating to the business of the company, wherein its name is not mentioned in the manner aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of 50*l.*

5. No increase to be made in the nominal capital of any company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability shall be advertised or otherwise treated as part of the capital of such company until it has been registered with the registrar of joint-stock companies; and no such registration shall be made unless a deed is produced to the registrar, executed by shareholders holding shares of the nominal value of not less than 25*l.*, to the amount in the aggregate of at least three-fourths of the proposed increased capital of the company, nor unless it is proved to the registrar, by such acknowledgment and declaration as hereinafter mentioned, that upon each of such shares there has been paid up by the holder thereof an amount of not less than 20*l.* per centum; and if any such increase of capital as aforesaid be advertised or otherwise treated as part of the capital of the company before the same has been so registered, every director of such company shall incur a penalty of 50*l.*; and the payment of the above per-centage shall be acknowledged in or indorsed on the deed so produced, and the fact of the same having been bonâ fide so paid shall be verified by a declaration of the directors, or any two of them, made in pursuance of the said act made in the 6 Will. 4, c. 62.

6. The members of a joint-stock company which has so obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, after such certificate is granted, notwithstanding the provisions contained in the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, shall not be triable* under any judgment, decree, or order which shall be obtained against such company, or for any debt or engagement of such company, further or otherwise than is hereinafter provided.

7. If any execution, either at law or in equity, shall have been issued against the property or effects of the company, and if there cannot be found sufficient wherewith to levy such execution, then such execution may be issued against any of the shareholders to the extent of their shares respectively in the capital of the company not then paid up: provided always, that no such execution shall issue against any shareholder except upon an order of the court in which the action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged; and upon such motion such court may order execution to issue accordingly; and for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the shareholders, and the amount of capital remaining to be paid upon their respective shares, it shall be lawful for any person entitled to any such execution, at all reasonable times, to inspect the register of shareholders without fee.

8. Where any company completely registered under the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, shall obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, the grant of such certificate shall not prejudice or affect any right which previously to the grant of such certificate has accrued to any creditor or other person against the company in its corporate capacity, or against any person then being or having been a member of such company, but every such creditor or other person shall be entitled to all such remedies against the company in its corporate capacity, and against every person then being or having been a member of such company, as he would have been entitled to in case such certificate had not been obtained.

9. No alteration made by virtue of this act in the name of any company shall prejudice or affect any right which previously to such alteration has accrued to such company as against any other company or person, or which has accrued to any other company or person as against such company, but every such company as against any other company or person, and every other company or person as against such company and the members thereof, shall be entitled to all such remedies as they or he would have been entitled to if no such alteration had been made; and no such alteration shall abate or render defective any legal proceeding pending at the time when such alteration is made.

10. In the case of any company which has obtained a certificate of limited liability, whenever, on taking the yearly accounts of such company, or by any report of the auditors thereof, it appears that three-fourths of the subscribed capital stock of the company has been lost, or has become unavailable in the course of trade, or from the insolvency of shareholders, or from any other cause, the trading and business of such company shall forthwith cease, or shall be carried on for the sole purpose of winding up its affairs, and the directors of such company shall forthwith take proper steps for the dissolution of such company, and for the winding up of its affairs, either by petition to the Court of Chancery, or by exercise of the powers of the deed of settlement, or by such other lawful course as they may think most fit.

11. If any company whose trading and business ought under the last immediately preceding section of this act to have ceased continues after that time to carry on any trading or business, except for the sole and bonâ fide purpose of winding up its affairs, every director of such company shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 50*l.* for every week during which such business is so unlawfully carried on.

12. Every pecuniary penalty imposed in pursuance of this act shall be deemed a debt due to the Crown, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

13. This act shall, so far as is consistent with the contents and subject-matter thereof, be taken as part of and construed with the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, and the 11 Vict. c. 78; and all the provisions of the said acts, save in so far as they are varied by this act, shall apply to persons and companies applying for or obtaining a certificate of complete registration with limited liability.

14. This act shall not apply to Scotland.

15. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Limited Liability Act, 1855."

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.
 Recently published, in 12mo., price 14s. cloth.
THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854: with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

CAUTION.—TO TRADESMEN, MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, OUTFITTERS, &c.

WHEREAS it has lately come to my knowledge that some unprincipled person or persons have for some time past been imposing upon the public, by selling to the Trade and others a spurious article under the name of BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK; this is to give Notice, that I am the original and sole Proprietor and Manufacturer of the said Article, and do not employ any traveller, or authorize any person to represent themselves as coming from my establishment, for the purpose of selling the said Ink. This Caution is published by me to prevent further impositions upon the public, and serious injury to myself.

E. B. BOND, Sole Executrix and Widow of the late John Bond, 28, Long-lane, West Smithfield, London.

* * To avoid disappointment from the substitution of counterfeits, be careful to ask for the genuine Bond's Permanent Marking Ink; and further to distinguish it, observe that NO SIXPENNY SIZE is or has at any time been prepared by him, the Inventor and Proprietor.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3
63 6 6	45 13 0
41 12 2	29 19 0
139 8 1	100 10 0

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 23, 1855.

IN continuing our summary of the cases upon the Gaming Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, we may add to the decisions cited last week that of Jessopp v. Lutwyche, (24 L. J., Ex., 65), in which the defendant pleaded to an action for money paid, first, that it was paid by way of wager on the market price, upon certain days, of shares in a certain company. He pleaded, secondly, that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff, as a broker in the city of London, in the purchasing and selling for the defendant in the said city certain shares in a mining company, and that the plaintiff was not a duly authorised broker.

Both pleas were held to be bad; the first, because the plaintiff might have paid the money at the express request of the defendant; and the second, because it did not appear that the plaintiff paid the money as a broker.

There are numerous transactions more or less connected with gaming transactions, which, however, may form the subject of an action, provided it is not between the parties to the wager.

Thus, in Johnson v. Lansley, (12 C. B. 408), A. and B. jointly made bets with third persons on a horse race. B. received the money, and gave A. a bill, accepted by C., (who was no party to the betting), for his share; it was held that A. might sue C. upon the bill. So, in Varney v. Hickman, (5 C. B. 271), it was held that the statute did not preclude a party, who repudiated the wager before the event was ascertained, from recovering back from a stakeholder the amount of his own deposit. With regard to the words of the 18th section, that "no action shall be brought for recovering any sum of money alleged to be won upon any wager, or which shall have been deposited in the hands of any person to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made," Maule, J., said that the first branch prevented the winner from bringing an action to recover the amount of the bet from the loser; and the second prevented the winner from suing the stakeholder for the entire sum deposited with him, but that it did not apply to a party seeking to recover his deposit from a stakeholder on a repudiation of the wager before the event is ascertained. To the same effect is Martin v. Hewson, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 214; S. C., 24 L. J., Ex., 174*); and see Gatty v. Field, (9 Q. B. 431). Where, however, the race had been run, it was held that the loser could not recover his deposit from the stakeholder, although he demanded it back before it was paid over to the winner. (Batty v. Marriot, 5 C. B. 818). In that case the Court held a foot race to be a lawful game, within the proviso of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18.

The distinction between making the consideration for a contract illegal, and making it void, is clearly shewn by the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1, which recites, that securities given in respect of gaming and usurious transactions were made void by the stat. 9 Ann. c. 14, and other statutes, and were sometimes taken for valuable consideration without notice; and then enacts, that instead of being void, they shall be deemed to have been given for an illegal consideration. Such bills are therefore incapable of being sued upon as between the original parties, and also by all persons who have taken them with notice, or after they were due, or without consideration, unless they are in a position to recover on a prior title; and they are good in the hands of a bona fide holder for value who took them before they were due. (See, as to the consideration in cases where no security had been given, and before the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 109, Applegarth v. Colley, 10 M. & W. 732; Thorpe v. Colman, 1 C. B. 199; and Batty v. Marriott, 5 C. B. 828).

In connexion with this branch of the subject, we may refer to an instance in which the Legislature have recently, by express enactment, made both the security and the contract void. Thus, by the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 202, any contract or security made or given by any bankrupt, &c., in consideration of a creditor forbearing to oppose, or of his consenting to the allowance of the bankrupt's certificate, or of his forbearing to petition for the recall of the same, is declared to be void*.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In Boyle v. Wiseman the Court of Exchequer have made a rule absolute for another new trial, which will be the third. The point on which it is now granted is this:—In order to fix the defendant with the publication of the libel, a witness was called, who said he had read a letter written by the defendant to a priest in France; and it being shewn that all had been done which could be to procure the letter, the witness was asked to state its contents. The defendant's counsel thereupon put a letter into his hands, and asked him if that was not the letter: he said it was not. The defendant's counsel then proposed to call a witness at once to shew that it was the letter; but the learned judge refused to allow this to be done, saying that he could be called as a part of the defendant's evidence. The Court held this to be an error, and said that the judge should have received the evidence tendered on this collateral issue, in order to be satisfied that a sufficient foundation was laid for admitting the secondary evidence before it was admitted.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Removal.—It is, however, competent for either party to remove the plaint into a superior court, on giving certain notices prescribed by the rules of the court, and on making a declaration at the hearing, that the title to some corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to some toll, market, fair, or franchise, is in question, or that the rent or damage in respect of which the distress has been taken was more than 20*l.*, and on becoming bound with two sufficient sureties in such sums as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the nature of the claim and the alleged value or amount of the property in dispute, or of the rent or damage, to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and to prove before the court by which such suit shall be tried that such title as aforesaid is in dispute between the parties, or that there was ground for believing that the said rent or damage was more than 20*l.* On compliance with these conditions, the cause may be removed into any court competent to try the same, in such manner as hath been accustomed. The cause is removed by certiorari, instead of recordari facias loquelam; the statutory county court, unlike the common-law county court, being a court of record.

* See further on this subject Smith's Law of Contracts, 2nd edition by Malcolm, pp 200, 201.

Ejectment.

Although the general language of the proviso contained in sect. 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, excludes actions of ejectment, one particular class of ejectments is by the express provisions of sect. 122 brought within the jurisdiction of the court. That class is ejectment for the recovery of a house, land, or other corporeal hereditament, the annual value or rent of which does not exceed 50*l.*, from any tenant whose interest has ended, and who has paid no one.

Practice.—A plaint and summons are entered and served in the usual way, or in the mode prescribed by the statute; and if the judge be of opinion that the tenancy has been duly determined, and the tenant or sub-tenant refuse to give up possession of the premises, the judge may issue his warrant to the high bailiff, requiring him to give possession to the landlord within ten clear days from the date of the warrant.

Appeal.—If the party against whom the warrant is issued be desirous of raising the question in another court, as to whether the landlord had, at the time of suing out the warrant, lawful right to the possession, he may stay proceedings on the warrant by becoming bound, with two sufficient sureties to be approved by the clerk of the court, in such sum as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the value of the premises and the probable costs of the action, to sue the person by whom such warrant was sued out with effect and without delay, and to pay costs in certain events: then proceedings will be stayed until judgment has been given in such action; and if a verdict pass for the plaintiff, the verdict and judgment thereon will supersede the warrant. If, however, the tenant should not proceed, or should fail in his action, the bond becomes forfeited, and proceedings thereon may be had, and the warrant enforced.

Protection Cases.

In cases within the Protection Acts, the clerk acts as official assignee and registrar, and is bound to present his accounts to the treasurer to be audited, and to pay over to him any balance remaining in hand. The high bailiff acts as messenger.

Practice.—The practice of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in London, in cases under the Protection Acts, the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, is adopted in the county court so far as it is applicable.

Practice in other Cases.

With regard to the jurisdiction in customs cases, nuisances, and arresting ships, no special practice has at present been established.

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

In seeking to enforce a claim for an unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or a distributive share under an intestacy or a legacy, the same practice prevails as in endeavouring to recover any other pecuniary demand.

Charitable Trusts—Practice.—The practice with reference to applications under the act relating to charitable trusts depends on the provisions of the statute; on certain rules framed by the Lord Chancellor, in pursuance of a power contained in the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853; and on the general practice of the court.

Persons who may apply.—The persons entitled to apply to the county court under the jurisdiction conferred by the act are, her Majesty's Attorney-General, the trustee or one or more of the trustees of any charity, or the person or persons administering or claiming to administer, or interested in, the charity which is the subject of the application, or any two or more of the inhabitants of any parish or place within which the charity is administered or applicable. This distinction, however, exists between applications by the Attorney-General and those by any of the other persons before mentioned—that the former may apply to the court at his discretion, but the latter require the sanction of the Charity Commissioners for the purpose.

Practice.—It will be convenient, in describing the practice of the court on these applications, to state, first, that which applies to private persons; and, secondly, that which applies to the Attorney-General.

Private Persons.—The person who is desirous of applying to the county court for relief, having obtained the proper order or certificate from the Charity Commissioners, must file it with the clerk. That officer will then, at the instance of the applicant, and subject to the discretion of the judge, summon or give notice to the proper persons to appear or attend proceedings at an appointed court. These summonses and notices are served by post, unless the judge otherwise directs. On the appointed day the persons summoned to appear, or who have received notice to attend, or any of the persons who are entitled to apply under the act, may appear and oppose the application. The judge then proceeds to make such order in the matter as to him seems just. This order, together with a copy of the other proceedings, is then transmitted to the Charity Commissioners. If it meet with their approval, the order is final, unless some person authorised to make an application under the statute is desirous of appealing against the order.

Appeal.—In such a case the intended appellant must, within a calendar month after making the order, give notice in writing to the commissioners and to the court of his wish to appeal, stating the grounds of his intended appeal. If the commissioners think that the appeal should be entertained, they give a certificate to that effect, and proceedings on the order are suspended during such time as the circumstances require. The commissioners may require the appellant to join in a bond with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk of the county court, to the treasurer of the court, or such other person as they think fit, in such sum as they think reasonable, to pay such costs of the appeal as the appellate court shall order; and also, if they think fit, to indemnify the charity against the costs and expenses of or attending such appeal. On compliance with the requisition of the commissioners, an order is made allowing the appeal. Within three calendar months the appellant must present a petition to the Court of Chancery praying such relief as the case may require. Upon the hearing of the petition the court may confirm, vary, or reverse the order appealed against, or may remit the order to the county court by which it was made, with or without any declaration of the Court of Chancery in relation to it; or the court may dispose of the matter of the order as in the case of a suit regularly instituted, or a petition. If the appellant do not proceed within three calendar months from the time at which the appeal is allowed, the order of the county court becomes final. If the costs adjudged by the appellate court to be paid by the appellant are not paid, the bond may be put in suit, and the sum recovered on it applied to indemnify the charity or the person damaged, as the case may require, and as the appellate court thinks right.

Proceedings by Attorney-General—Appeal.—The Attorney-General's power to proceed ex officio continues in the same manner as if the act had not been passed; and he may, without the sanction of the Charity Commissioners, make application to the county court in such matters. On making such an application he must lodge with the clerk a statement similar to the commissioners' certificate or order. On the production of this statement, the clerk will take the same steps for the purpose of bringing the cause to a hearing as on the application of a private person. At the hearing the same proceedings as in other cases take place. The judge, having heard the application, pronounces his judgment and makes his order. Against this order the Attorney-General, acting ex officio, may, at any time within three calendar months after the order has been made, lodge, commence, and prosecute an appeal, without giving notice or becoming bound, as in the case of private persons, and the county court is thereupon bound to make an order allowing the appeal. The subsequent proceedings on the appeal are the same as in other cases.

Deputy or Jury not allowed to act in Charity Cases.—It is to be observed that no deputy judge is allowed to dispose of these matters, and a jury cannot be summoned to dispose of the facts.

Record of Proceedings.—The clerk enters the proceedings in each case under its respective title, in a book kept for that purpose, and the various documents lodged with him are filed.

Other Cases.—No special practice has yet been established with respect to the Friendly, Industrial, and Provident Societies Act, the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, or the Succession Duties Act.

AUXILIARY JURISDICTION.

Abconding Debtors.

Where any person is indebted in a sum to the amount of 20*l.* or more, and he is about to leave the country for the purpose of avoiding or delaying his creditors, it is competent for the creditor to apply, under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 52, to the judge of any court, except the judges acting in Middlesex and Surrey, for an order to arrest the debtor. If the judge be satisfied by affidavit that the debt exists, and that the debtor is about to leave the country for the purpose of avoiding or delaying the creditor, he may issue his warrant, directed to the high bailiff, for the purpose of arresting the debtor. The high bailiff may execute the warrant in any part of England at any time within seven days after its date, including the day of its date. This proceeding by arrest is only auxiliary to proceedings in the superior court. If proceedings are not taken in conformity with the provisions of the statute, the warrant does not operate as a protection to the party on whose behalf such warrant has been issued, but is wholly void.

Common-law Procedure Act.

The Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, having been in operation only a few weeks, no practice has at present been established with respect to proceedings under it.

EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

Chancery.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act.—The power which the Court of Chancery possesses of availing itself of the assistance of the county courts in certain cases does not appear ever to have been exercised, and the jurisdiction under the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act has been very rarely brought into operation. No peculiar practice, consequently, has been established with reference to those matters.

Insolvency.

In the exercise of the jurisdiction in insolvency, as regulated by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the clerk of the county court acts as registrar, and the high bailiff as messenger.

Practice.—The course of proceeding is, that the prisoner, in whatever part of England he may be confined, beyond twenty miles from the General Post-office, presents his petition for relief, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in London. The court in London forthwith makes an order referring the petition for hearing to the county court within the district of which the insolvent is in custody, and transmits the petition and schedule to the court for hearing. The insolvent or his attorney delivers all books, papers, and accounts in his possession, and relating to his debts, credits, or estate, to the clerk of the county court. On the usual day (of which due notice is advertised) for hearing insolvency cases, the petition comes on in its order, and the matter is disposed of by the judge in conformity with the provisions of the statute. The petition and schedule, together with a statement of what has been done in the matter, are then transmitted to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in London, where the proceedings are filed. The judge may recommend, but it seems cannot appoint, the creditors' assignee, though his recommendation is generally confirmed by the court in London. In other respects the practice of the Insolvent Court in London is applied to the proceedings in the county court.

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM OF THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF VENDORS AND PURCHASERS OF REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmont the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment, &c.'—18 Jurist, p. 872.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 30, 1855.

Our last synopsis of cases decided by the Court of Criminal Appeal will be found in 18 Jur., part 2, p. 65. We now proceed to place before our readers a review of the cases decided in the interval, believing that it will be found useful at this time, when the sessions and assizes are approaching.

Concealment of Birth.—The dead body of a child was placed by the prisoner under the bolster of the bed in which she was lying, with the intention of endeavouring to conceal the body from the surgeon, but intending afterwards to remove it to some other place; and it was held (Pollock, C. B., dissentiente) that this was a sufficient disposing of the body to support a conviction, under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 14, for concealing the birth of the child. (Reg. v. Perry, 1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 408).

Conspiracy.—In Reg. v. Carlisle and Another (18 Jur., part 1, p. 386) it has been decided that where two persons, acting in concert, make false and fraudulent representations to a creditor of one of them, and thereby induced him to forego part of his claim, they may be convicted of conspiracy. The following were the facts:—B. had purchased a mare of the prosecutor for 39l. upon credit. B. and C. subsequently conspired to give a false account of the mare's soundness, and thereby induced the prosecutor to take 27l. in satisfaction of his claim. It was contended for the prisoners that the indictment could not be sustained, inasmuch as the right of the prosecutor to his full claim was not altered, acceptance of the smaller sum being no satisfaction of the larger; and therefore it could not be said that he was cheated or defrauded.

Embezzlement.—Nice points frequently arise upon the question as to whether a servant has received money on account of his master. The following is an instance:—The prisoner was employed to superintend the grinding of corn at the mill of a county gaol. He had no right to grind any corn except such as was brought to him with a ticket, and had no leave to grind any grain for his private benefit. In breach of his duty, however, he did grind certain corn without a ticket, and received money for it, and appropriated it to his own use. The Court held that this was not receiving money on account of his masters, but an improper use of the machinery intrusted to him. (Reg. v. Harris, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 408).

In Reg. v. Gibbs (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 118) the point decided was upon the relation of master and servant. The prisoner was a carrier, employed only between certain glove sewers and the manufacturers in carrying the gloves from the one to the other, and receiving the money for the work, and paying it to the glove sewers, after deducting his charge. He appropriated some of the money so received, and was indicted for embezzlement but it was held that he could not be considered the servant of the persons defrauded. He was bailee of the money, and therefore his offence amounted only to a breach of trust.

Evidence.—See Practice.

False Pretences.—A case, (Reg. v. Eagleton), involving most important points, has been fully argued before all the judges, and is now standing over for judgment. The defendant, a baker, was under a contract to supply the poor of a union with loaves of bread of a certain weight. He supplied loaves deficient in weight, and made a return to the relieving officer of the number of loaves he had supplied. The question is, whether this is obtaining money by false pretences, and the judgment is anxiously looked for, inasmuch as it will probably go far towards settling what amounts to an offence within the statute.

An indictment, which alleged that the defendant falsely pretended that a certain sum of money was "due and owing" to him for work, was held to be bad, as not containing an allegation of a false pretence of an existing fact. The allegation that money was "due and owing" amounted to no more than a mere matter of opinion, either as regarded fact or law. (Reg. v. Oates, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 429).

Another example of what will be held to amount to a false pretence of an existing fact is afforded by the case of Reg. v. Archer, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 479). There the defendant obtained goods by falsely pretending that he wanted them for J. S., whom he represented to be a person of opulence. The prosecutors supplied the goods to the defendant for himself, and gave him credit for them. There was no such person as J. S.; and the conviction was affirmed.

Forgery.—The 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, s. 18, makes it a felony to engrave, or in anywise make, upon any plate, &c., any bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, or any part of any bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, purporting to be the bill or note of any persons, &c. carrying on the business of bankers, (other than and except the Bank of England), without the authority of such persons, &c. The Court, in putting a construction upon this section, have held that the word "note" does not mean merely the obligation or writing, but the whole paper or thing which circulates as a note, and that therefore the border or ornamental margin is part of a note within the meaning of the statute. (Reg. v. Keitt, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 454). In the same case it was also decided, that the engraving need not shew upon the face of it that it purports to be part of a genuine note, but that a comparison may be made with a genuine note.

Larceny.—Reg. v. Watts (18 Jur., part 1, p. 192) decides that an agreement, the subject-matter of which was of the value of 20*l.*, although unstamped, is a chose in action, and therefore not the subject of larceny. This case was argued before eleven of the learned judges, and Parke, B., dissented from the conclusion arrived at by the other ten.

A wife delivered some of her husband's goods to her adulterer, who knew that she had taken them without the husband's authority. This was held to be larceny in the adulterer. (Reg. v. Featherstone, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 538).

The prisoner, after he had assigned his goods to trustees for the benefit of creditors, and before the trustees had taken possession, and whilst they were still in his custody, removed the goods, intending to deprive his creditors of them. He was indicted for stealing the goods, and the jury expressly found that the goods were not in his custody as agent of the trustees. The Court were of opinion, that the jury having negatived the bailment, the prisoner could not be convicted of larceny. (Reg. v. Pratt, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 539).

A purse, with money in it, was left by a purchaser upon the prisoner's stall. It was pointed out to her by a third person, and she then put it in her pocket, and afterwards concealed it. When the owner returned, she denied all knowledge of the purse. The jury found that the prisoner took up the purse knowing it was not her own, and intending at the time to appropriate it to her own use, but that she did not know who was the owner at the time she took it. It was held that the purse could not be considered as lost property, and therefore the prisoner was rightly convicted of larceny. If there had been evidence that the purse had been lost, then the jury ought to have been asked whether the prisoner had grounds to suppose that by reasonable efforts the owner might be found. (Reg. v. West, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1031).

The prisoner, by representing to a fellow-servant that he had been sent by the managing clerk of their masters to remove some wheat, of which the masters were the consignors, obtained the key of a storehouse and removed the wheat, which was afterwards disposed of, with the privity of the prisoner, by other parties associated with him in the commission of the offence. It was contended for the prisoner that the offence did not amount to larceny, but was, if anything, false pretences. But the Court held it was larceny, Alderson, B., observing that it was sought to make the prisoner not guilty because he had told a lie. (Reg. v. Robins, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1058).

A bargain was made for the sale of a dress at a certain price, and another dress was to be given into the bargain. The prisoners obtained part of the money, and then declined to take the remainder, but laid down the dress first produced, which was of little value, and refused to let the prosecutrix have the other. The question was whether this was larceny, or merely a breach of contract. The Court said, that assuming it formed part of the scheme that the property was to be obtained by a false sale, then there was no contract, but a fraud, by means of which the felony was committed; and the conviction for larceny was affirmed. (Reg. v. Morgan and Another, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1086).

Lawful Apprehension.—A conviction for "wounding with intent to prevent a lawful apprehension" was quashed upon the following facts:—The prosecutor, a sergeant of police, was assaulted by the prisoner, and about two hours afterwards attempted, without having a warrant, to take the prisoner into custody, when he was again assaulted and wounded by the prisoner. (Reg. v. Walker, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 409). There was no continued pursuit, and the interference of the prosecutor was not for the purpose of preventing an affray. In order, therefore, to render the apprehension lawful, he should have been armed with a warrant.
